

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

I. INTRODUCTORY.

§ 1. Scope of Article and Survey of Subject.—This article treats of the law as applied to man's relation to, use of and exercise of ownership over animals. It includes a treatment of animals, wild or domestic, as the subject of property, the regulation of the ownership and the business of raising them, and the incidents and liabilities flowing from the ownership and bailment. The liability of an owner for injuries to persons or other animals and for trespasses of animals owned by him is treated, and as an incident to the latter, the duty of keeping and maintaining fences is discussed, though the general subject of fences is elsewhere treated.¹ This article treats also of the civil liability, other than that of carriers, railroads, and street railways,² for injuries to animals, as well as the criminal liability for the infliction of injuries to and cruelty to animals. While a contract of agistment is distinguished from a lease,³ the rights of the parties under a lease are reserved for another article.⁴ Other related subjects not directly discussed include the following: fish and fisheries,⁵ game laws,⁶ livery-stable keepers,⁷ veterinary surgeons,⁸ the sale⁹ and mortgaging of animals,¹⁰ larceny of animals,¹¹ situs of animals for taxation,¹² to what extent animals are exempt from execution,¹³ injuries to animals on highways,¹⁴ bounties,¹⁵ health regulation concerning the keeping of animals in cities,¹⁶ life, health and accident insurance on livestock,¹⁷ and the prevention of combinations to obstruct the sale of livestock in the state.¹⁸

The law of California as applied to the subject of animals is in substantial accord with that of other states, and of the common law, except in regard to the subject of trespassing animals. As to this branch of the subject, California law, while repugnant to that rule of the common law requiring an owner of cattle to prevent their trespassing on land of his neighbor, is the same as that prevailing in other states where the business of raising and grazing of cattle is pursued on a large scale. The great difficulty with reference to this subject arises from the fact that when portions of the state changed from a grazing to an agricultural section, the legislature passed numerous special acts in effect reviving the common-law rule. There are scores of such statutes and as many as three were passed at the same session of the legislature relating to the same county or portions of counties. Many of these statutes are still in force, and they govern the rights of the parties in counties covered. With reference to other counties, the common law was in effect restored in all except six by the Estray Act of 1915, but in 1919, the counties were given the privilege of returning to the former rule by a vote of the people at an election had for that purpose.^{18a}

§ 2. Definition and Classification.—The term “animal” is used in contradistinction to man, and includes inferior irrational sentient beings, possessed of the power of voluntary motion or self-motion.¹⁹ The Penal Code defines the word “animal” as used in the provisions prohibiting cruelty to animals, as including every dumb creature.²⁰ Animals in general are divided into two classes, domestic or domitae naturae, and wild or ferae naturae. Domestic animals are those which are naturally tame and gentle, or which by long-continued association with man have become thoroughly domesticated and are now reduced to such a state of subjection to his will that they no longer possess the disposition or inclination to escape. Wild animals are such as are of a wild nature or disposition and so require to be reclaimed and made tame by art, industry or education, or else must be kept in confinement to be brought within the immediate power of the owner.²¹ The term “animals wild by nature,” as used in the Civil Code relating to such animals, includes, among others, game birds,²² wild goats,²³ and fish.²⁴

II. OWNERSHIP.

§ 3. Domestic and Wild Animals Generally.—The ownership of domestic animals may be as absolute as that over any other valuable chattel. The code places them in the same category in this respect as chattels, since it provides that there may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery, and of all domestic animals.²⁵ And it may be remarked that there is a statutory provision to the effect that grand larceny is committed when the property taken is a horse, mare, gelding, cow, steer, bull, calf, mule, jack, jenny, sheep or lamb.¹ In the case of wild animals, however, only a qualified right of private ownership can be obtained. The wild game in the state not reduced to possession of private parties belongs to the people in their collective sovereign capacity,² as in England it was in the king; and the right and power to protect and preserve such property for the common use and benefit is one of the recognized prerogatives of the sovereign, coming to us from the common law, and preserved and expressly provided for by the statutes of this and every other state of the Union.³ Inasmuch as wild game belongs to the people of the state, it is not the subject of private ownership, except in so far as the people may elect to make it so.⁴

The extent to which individual ownership in wild animals can be acquired is defined in section 656 of the Civil Code, which provides that:

“Animals wild by nature are the subject of ownership, while living, only when on the land of the person claiming them, or when taken and held in possession, or disabled and immediately pursued.”

By this section, ownership in wild animals may exist in four classes of cases. The property is acquired only by occupancy, possession, custody or control, though actual seizure is not indispensable, as in the first class, wild animals on the land of an owner or lessee of a hunting preserve belong to such owner or lessee.⁵ Animals which have been tamed and which possess an animus revertendi are the subject of ownership though they may have accidentally escaped or strayed from the immediate possession of the owner. But ownership in wild animals possessing no animus revertendi continues only so long as the animal is in the possession of the claimant, for the code specifically provides that such animals are the subject of ownership when taken and held in possession.⁶

§ 4. Protection of Ownership in Wild Animals.—When within the provisions of the code section relating to ownership in wild animals, an individual is as much to be protected in the enjoyment of his rights in this species of property as in any other under the law.⁷ The owner of such animals has a remedy by damages for the trespass committed, and also a remedy by replevin. Thus, where a lease confers upon the lessee the right to utilize a portion of the wild goats within his inclosures, the lessee has a remedy by claim and delivery against anyone, even the lessor, wrongfully taking goats out of his possession. It cannot be successfully urged against such right of action that the lessee does not have the right to all the goats or to any particular ones, as the plaintiff is given dominion over all of them with the right of selection for the purpose of killing or other utilization.⁸ Again, a lessee of a hunting preserve has such rights in wild birds and animals within his inclosure as entitles him to protect them from invasion by those not authorized to be there. Any person violating such rights is as much of a trespasser as though entering the lessee's dwelling unbidden, and the lessee may maintain an action against him for damages, or when irreparable injury is threatened, he may enjoin the trespasser from committing further trespasses. The destruction of a hunting privilege by driving away the birds and deterring their return makes out a case of irreparable damage within the rule.⁹

§ 5. Increase of Animals.—The word “increase” though variously used, has acquired a special meaning when applied to domestic animals. So applied, unless otherwise expressly qualified in the context of an agreement relating thereto, it invariably means the offspring, progeny or young of such animals. It does not include the profit arising from the use of the animals, as the wool of sheep. Quite possibly because domestic animals are so frequently considered as herds, the word “increase” has acquired this partially specialized meaning in respect to them, although now it is so understood even when a single animal is spoken of.¹⁰ It is a well-settled rule that, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the increase of animals belongs to the owner of the parent stock.¹¹ Being the owner he can sell, or create a lien upon the progeny as well as sell or create a lien on the parent stock.¹² But to create a lien upon the progeny or offspring, they must be specifically mentioned in the instrument creating it. If not so specifically mentioned, the increase belongs to the mortgagor retaining possession of the animals. This rule follows from the fact that in California a mortgagor is not, by the execution of a chattel mortgage, divested of his title to the property, but still remains its owner, while the mortgagee has only a lien thereon. In the absence of any express agreement upon the subject, the lien of a mortgage is limited to the property described in the mortgage, and does not include other property of the same character which the mortgagor may have afterward acquired and placed with the mortgaged property. If he retains the use of the property, whatever income or profit may be derived from such use belongs to him.¹³ It is immaterial in this connection, whether or not the offspring were in gestation at the date of the mortgage. As the lien of the mortgage extends only to the property described therein, the mortgagor is the owner of the offspring in gestation at the date of the mortgage, and has the same right to dispose of them as he has to dispose of oranges on trees, or wheat in the ground or standing in the field when a mortgage of the land was made.¹⁴

III. LICENSES AND POLICE REGULATIONS.

§ 6. Power to Require Licenses and to Regulate—Grazing sheep or cattle.—The Political Code empowers boards of supervisors, in the exercise of their police powers and for the purpose of regulation and not otherwise, to license all and every kind of business not prohibited by law and transacted and carried on within the limits of their respective jurisdictions.¹⁵ The raising, grazing, herding or pasturing of sheep or cattle is or may be a business within the meaning of this provision.¹⁶ And while it is a lawful vocation, there can be no question that it is an occupation which may properly be subjected to reasonable regulations for the purpose of preventing or lessening the annoyance or discomfort, which, if unrestrained, it would be likely to cause.¹⁷ It follows that boards of supervisors may, for the purpose of regulation, require licenses of persons engaged in such business.¹⁸ Formerly, under the County Government Act, such licenses could be required both for the purpose of regulation and of revenue,¹⁹ but by an amendment to the Political Code in 1901, this power was restricted to licenses for the purpose of regulation only. The code provision as amended authorized boards of supervisors to require licenses, in the exercise of their police power and for the purpose of regulation and not otherwise.²⁰ The use of the words "and not otherwise," clearly discloses a legislative intent to restrict the power of boards of supervisors in this respect, and to repeal by implication the section of the County Government Act authorizing licenses for purposes of revenue.¹ The power to regulate the keeping of dogs and animals running at large is discussed in a subsequent section.²

disease shall be sold, used, or permitted to be used for the food of human beings or of any domestic animal or fowl;⁷ and that the sale of cattle or other livestock infected with the Boophilus annulatus tick is prohibited.⁸ Furthermore, laws have been passed with regard to the preparation and distribution of serums or vaccines for the prevention of hog cholera.⁹ It is also to be observed in this place that the board of supervisors, in their respective counties, are given the jurisdiction and power, under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law, to provide for the destruction of gophers, squirrels, other wild animals, noxious weeds, and insects injurious to fruit or fruit trees, or vines, or vegetable or plant life;¹⁰ and that an act has been adopted which provides for the control and the destruction of predatory animals, vesting in the state commissioner of horticulture the administration of the provisions thereof, and defining his powers and duties in relation thereto.¹¹

§ 7. Limitation on Power to Regulate and Amount of Fee.—It is within the legislative discretion to place such restrictions upon the business of cattle-raising, as upon the conduct of other business, as may be reasonably necessary for the public safety, comfort or health. The manner and extent of such regulation are primarily legislative questions, and the courts will not interfere under the guise of regulation, unless arbitrary or unreasonable burdens have been imposed.¹² The amount of the license fee must not be more than is reasonably necessary for the purpose sought,—i. e., the regulation of the business, considering the necessary or probable expenses incident to the licensing, inspection and enforcement of the ordinance under a proper system of supervision and police surveillance, including the labor of officers and other expenses thereby incurred, and all the incidental consequences that may be likely to subject the public to cost, in relation to the business regulated.¹³ The license fee must have relation to expenses incurred for these purposes. It may not be gauged upon an estimate of consequences or damages which may result from the business. These may be considered as suggesting the necessity for regulatory provisions, but not as a basis by which to determine the amount of the license fee. Accordingly, the damage to roadways by sheep cannot be allowed as an item of expense to be met with a license charge.¹⁴

With reference to the licensing of sheep, an act forbids the imposing of a license fee in excess of five cents per head.¹⁵ This act is a restrictive measure, and does not confer authority to impose a fee in the amount fixed. In fact, the legislature is without power to impose an unreasonable tax, and is without power to delegate such power to a municipality. The reasonableness of a fee not in excess of this statute must, therefore, be determined independently of this act.¹⁶

§ 8. Persons Required to Pay License Charge.—An ordinance requiring everyone engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding or pasturing sheep in the county to procure a license, applies to all persons engaged in the business in the county, whether they are residents of the county or not. Indeed, if the ordinance did not apply to nonresidents, it would be void, because it would not be uniform, in that it allowed nonresidents to carry on the business on more favorable terms than residents.¹⁷ Such an ordinance does not, however, apply to a person who neither raises, herds, or pastures his sheep in the county, but who merely takes them there temporarily on his farm for the purpose of shearing them,¹⁸ or who only drives the sheep through the county as expeditiously as possible.¹⁹ But, of course, the license fee cannot be evaded by the mere pretense of driving sheep through or into a county, for an alleged temporary purpose, when it is evident that the real object in so doing, and what is really done, is to graze and pasture sheep in the county.²⁰ This question being one of the purpose and intent with which the sheep are in the county, the determination of the real object is a question of fact, as to which a finding of the trial court upon conflicting evidence is binding on the appellate court.²¹ By an act passed in 1919, persons and corporations who do not have their principal home ranches and livestock headquarters in the state, are forbidden to herd or graze sheep or cattle upon uninclosed lands in the state, unless they first obtain a valid license therefor. IV. BAILMENT.

§ 9. Bailment Generally.—With reference to the bailment of animals, the fundamental principles underlying the subject of bailments control.²³ A contract by which an owner delivers possession of cattle to another upon the terms that the latter shall care for and return them at a stated time, the increase to be divided between them, does not constitute a partnership but is a contract of bailment.²⁴ It is the duty of a depositary of a living animal,²⁵ and of one who borrows a living animal for use without reward,²⁶ to treat it kindly and provide everything necessary and suitable for it. A gratuitous bailee charged with the care of stock is only required to use slight care for the preservation of the stock left with him. Unless he is guilty of gross negligence, he is not liable for injuries to them caused by other stock in his possession. And when the bailor assumes the care and responsibility of the animals the bailee is not liable for their loss not caused by his negligence or fault.²⁷

One who hires an animal must use ordinary care for its preservation,²⁸ and is responsible in damages if the animal is injured or dies by reason of the negligence of himself or his servant.²⁹ If one hires a horse to be driven to a specified place, the driving of the horse beyond that place is a violation of the contract of bailment and an unlawful conversion. If, in such case, the horse dies, or the bailee fails to return it, the owner may recover its value in damages. If, on the other hand, the minds of the parties do not meet as to the particular place to which the horse is to be driven, the bailee is not liable in damages in case the horse dies, without his fault.³⁰

In accordance with the general rule that a sale of goods passes to the purchaser only such title as the vendor had, a sale of livestock by a bailee thereof does not pass a good title to the purchaser, though he may have purchased in good faith and without notice of the bailor's title. The owner may maintain an action against the purchaser for the stock, and he is not precluded from recovering by the fact that he may have authorized the bailee to drive the stock to distant parts of the state, thereby enabling the bailee to act as owner. Inasmuch as the purchaser stands in privity with the bailee, admissions of the bailee, while in possession, tending to show how he held the cattle, are admissible in evidence against the purchaser when sued for the cattle.³¹

Saver of domestic animal.—It is expressly provided by statute that if a person saves a domestic animal from drowning or starvation, he must, within a reasonable time, inform the owner thereof, if known, and make restitution to him upon demand, without compensation except a reasonable charge for saving and caring therefor. And it is further declared that if the owner is not known to such saver, he must, within five days, file an affidavit with the justice of the peace of the county whose office is nearest to the place of such saving, particularly describing the animal and the time, place and circumstances under which it was saved.¹ There is also a statutory provision, which sets forth the circumstances under which the saver of the animal may become its owner.²

§ 10. Agistment Defined and Distinguished.—Webster defines the word “agist” to mean “to take to graze or pasture at a certain sum,” and “agistment” as “the taking and feeding other men’s cattle in the king’s forest, or on one’s own land, at a certain rate.”³ An agister then is one who takes in horses or cattle to pasture, having charge and control of them.⁴ A contract of agistment is distinct from a lease.⁵ The fact that the owner of land may take some risk as to whether pasture is good or not is not a determining factor with reference to the question whether an instrument is a contract of agistment or a lease, as all landlords who take a share of the product of rent, take such a risk.⁶ The distinguishing feature between them lies in the fact that in an agistment the possession of the owner of the land or the agister is not divested, whereas in the case of a lease, the lessor is divested of and the lessee is put in possession. The fact that a contract requires the owner of the cattle to bear the cost and risk of herding his own cattle does not show an intention that possession of the land shall be transferred and show that it is a lease. On the contrary, such a provision shows the agreement to be a contract of agistment, as the owner of the cattle would be required to perform such acts if the instrument were a lease and no such provision would be necessary.⁷

§ 11. Rights and Liabilities of Parties.—Unlike an innkeeper or common carrier, an agister is under no legal obligation to take charge of or keep any cattle that may be brought to him for that purpose. He may receive or refuse them, without violating any duty or obligation imposed on him by law, and he is at perfect liberty, when he receives livestock, to impose such terms and conditions as he may deem proper.⁸ The agister may require the owner to bear the cost and risk of herding his own cattle,⁹ or he may merely require the owner to furnish the herders, and himself assume the duty of agister to take charge of and care for the cattle. In the latter case, the herders, though provided by the owner are subordinates of the agister and are bound to obey his commands. If the herders abandon their work without cause, it is the duty of the owner to furnish others, failing which the agister may employ others at the owner's expense.¹⁰

An agister, as a depositary of living animals, is required to provide them with suitable food and shelter, and treat them kindly.¹¹ While he is not an insurer against injury to or loss of the stock intrusted to his keeping, he is bound to take reasonable care thereof, and injury or loss resulting from ordinary casualties that could have been averted by the exercise of such reasonable care constitutes negligence for which he is responsible. In this case reasonable care is that degree of care which it is presumed an ordinarily careful and prudent man would have exercised under the same circumstances with reference to his own stock. Unless it can be said that the facts and circumstances established are such that reasonable men can reach but one conclusion therefrom, the question as to whether or not an agister exercised the required degree of care is a question for the determination of the jury.¹² In accordance with these rules an agister may be held liable for the loss of stock through a negligent failure to provide sufficient water,¹³ or food and shelter.¹⁴ The agister is forbidden to use the animals or permit anyone other than the owner or person entitled so to do, without the owner's consent.¹⁵ He is required at the end of the term to return cattle left with him. As this duty is implied by law, it is not necessary to incorporate any provision to this effect in a contract of agistment.¹⁶

§ 12. Actions.—An agister may by action recover, of the person contracting with him for pasturage, compensation for the care and keeping of animals left with him, and the defendant in such an action cannot avoid liability by showing that some of the cattle belong to another or may belong jointly to the defendant and another.¹⁷ It is, however, a condition of a contract of agistment that the land should be suitable for grazing, and if the cattle are removed because the land is unsuitable, the agister cannot recover compensation for pasturage, though the owner may have agreed to pasture a designated number of cattle.¹⁸ This is in accordance with the well-settled rule that where performance depends upon the existence of a given thing, and such existence was assumed as the basis of the agreement, performance is excused to the extent that the thing ceases to exist or turns out to be non-existent.¹⁹

Moreover, an owner of livestock may bring an action against the agister for damages for loss or injury to his cattle resulting from a negligent failure to provide sufficient food or water.²⁰ The defendant, in such an action, in making his defense, is entitled to show, if he can, that the ranges were not overstocked, that there was sufficient feed growing on the ranges to supply in a proper measure all the cattle grazing thereon, and that the death of the plaintiff's cattle was due to other causes than that of want of sufficient feed. This is a proper matter of defense and a defendant is not prohibited from showing it because he was improperly refused permission to go into this matter on cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses. It is not improper cross-examination of an agister, who has testified as to the number of stock usually kept on certain ranges, to ask him whether the range was overstocked at the time the plaintiff's cattle died. Such a question does not call for expert testimony in the strict legal concept of that phrase.¹

effect, one who merely provides food and takes care of an animal, as an agister or a livery-stable keeper, has no lien on the property for compensation in pasturing, caring for or feeding it.² The law gives innkeepers and common carriers a lien for their reasonable charges because they are compelled to take the care and custody of goods,³ and it gives a lien to persons who, by their labor and skill, have imparted an additional value to the goods.⁴ An agister or livery-stable keeper is neither compelled to take the charge and custody of animals of others, nor does he by doing so add to their value. Consequently, he has no lien, unless there be a statute or special agreement to that effect. This rule has been recognized in California, but now it is provided by statute that livery or boarding or feed stable proprietors and persons pasturing horses or stock, have a lien, dependent upon possession, for their compensation in caring for, boarding, feeding, or pasturing such horses or stock.⁵ This statute expressly and unconditionally gives a lien for pasturing stock, and it is not necessary to the enforcement of such lien that the plaintiff should be engaged in that general business.⁶

It is essential, however, that the animal be placed with the agister by its owner or by someone having authority from him. There is no good reason why a person not the owner should be permitted to pledge property or create a lien on it any more than he should be permitted to sell it. And it has been said that a contrary rule would be in violation of the fundamental rights of property guaranteed by the constitution.⁷ Under this rule no lien is created in favor of an agister when an animal is left with him by one who has possession under a conditional sale but who never acquires title by reason of default in payment of the purchase price.⁸ The courts have not yet determined whether an owner of stock can, by cross-complaint filed in an action to enforce an agister's lien, recover damages resulting from a refusal to surrender possession of such stock on a payment or tender of the amount due. Whatever may be the rule in this respect, a cross-complaint seeking such damages is insufficient which does not allege that the sum tendered was the full amount due at the time the tender was made.⁹

V. BREEDING.

§ 14. Duties of Owner of Animals.—Every person who keeps a stallion, jack, or bull, and who permits the same to be used for the purpose of propagation for hire, is required annually to obtain a license therefor from the tax collector. The license so obtained entitles the holder thereof to the right to go into any county of the state for the purpose of propagation, without further license or expense.¹⁰ The owner of such animal may register him with clubs or associations organized for the purpose of improving breeds of animals. But every person who by any false or fraudulent pretense obtains from any club, association, society, or company, organized for the purpose of improving the breed of cattle, horses, sheep, swine, or other domestic animals, a certificate of registration of any animal in the herd register, or any other register of any such club, association, society, or company, or a transfer of such registration, and any person who, for a valuable consideration, gives a false pedigree of any animal, with intent to mislead, is guilty of a misdemeanor.¹¹ The owner of breeding animals should not allow them to become a nuisance, and the Penal Code makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to let a stallion or jack to mares or jennies within the limits of any city, town or village, or within four hundred yards thereof, except in an inclosure sufficient to obstruct the view of all the inhabitants within such limits, and for any person in charge of any stallion, bull, boar, ram, or buck goat to turn out or permit such animal to be turned out or run at large in any county.¹²

§ 15. Lease and Service of Animals.—The owner of a stallion or other breeding animal may lease such animal. A lease in which the lessor reserves the right to have the horse or other animal cover a certain number of animals is assignable, and the assignee of the contract and purchaser of the animal is entitled to all the benefits arising out of the contract and the ownership of the horse that his assignor would have been entitled to, had he continued to be the owner of the horse and the contract. But before the assignee can avail himself of the benefits of the contract, he must give notice to the lessee of the horse of the purchase and assignment.¹³ While the success of service by a male breeding animal may be warranted, so as to preclude a recovery of the stipulated fee in case such service is unsuccessful,¹⁴ in the absence of such a warranty, the owner of the animal bred is liable for the price of the service, though it may prove unsuccessful. Even where he is given the privilege of return the following season, he is liable for the service fee, if he fails to avail himself of the privilege.¹⁵

The code gives every owner or person having any stallion, jack, or bull used for propagating purposes, a lien for the agreed price of its service upon any mare or cow and upon the offspring of such service, unless some willfully false representation concerning the breeding or pedigree of such stallion, jack, or bull has been made or published by the owner or person in charge thereof, or by some other person, at the request or instigation of such owner or person in charge.¹⁶ The claimant of such lien is required to file a verified claim, setting forth the particulars specified in the statute, within ninety days after the service on account of which the lien is claimed. When so filed, the claim is notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers of the mare or cow and of the offspring of such service for one year after such filing.¹⁷

VI. MARKS AND BRANDS.

§ 16. In General.—The difficulties growing out of the ownership of numerous parties, of herds of stock with their rapid increase are great, and the legislature in order to prevent controversies, and to secure the evidence of ownership in a practical mode best adapted to the circumstances of the country, has passed laws regulating the marking, branding and counterbranding of stock which are imperative in character and are required by the wants and necessities of the country.¹⁸ Thus, the law requires every owner of horses, mules, cattle, sheep, goats or hogs running at large to have and record a brand or counter-brand different from any one in use by any other person, so far as may be known.¹⁹ It requires the owners to give rodeos at stated periods of the year for the purpose of segregating their stock, and marking and branding it so as to designate the owner.²⁰ It also requires such persons, when they sell their animals, to counterbrand them or give a written descriptive bill of sale,¹ and requires all persons slaughtering animals to keep the hides for fifteen days to enable persons to examine them on demand.² Treated as a police regulation, the latter code provision does not seem to be so unreasonable as to be void, as being in violation of the constitutional guarantee against unreasonable seizures and searches. No penalty whatever is affixed to a violation of this provision, and if any liability can accrue from such violation it must be established in a civil action in favor of the party injured thereby. A failure to comply with the statute is not a crime. Neither is it evidence of a crime, and in a prosecution for larceny of a branded animal, it is reversible error for the trial court to instruct the jury with reference to this statute as the effect of such an instruction is to invoke against the defendant the violation of another statute for the purpose of establishing his guilt.³

Norton, J., concurring specially, says the law does not require a branding by the purchaser, but only a counterbranding by the seller, or a bill of sale).

2. Pol. Code, § 3185.

3. People v. Tipton, 73 Cal. 405, 14 Pac. 894.

In case of dispute in regard to a mark or brand, the code provides that the person first recording the same is entitled thereto.⁴ When a cattle owner delivers possession of his cattle and branding iron as security for an obligation, and the mortgagee, on satisfaction of the obligation, refuses to redeliver the branding iron, an action at law for damages and for the return of the iron is not the proper remedy when the real question between the parties is not the right to possession of the iron, but the right to use a certain brand. A court of equity alone can afford effectual relief in such a case.⁵

§ 17. As Evidence.—The Political Code provides that a properly certified copy of a brand as made by the recorder is evidence on the trial of any action in a court of competent jurisdiction as to the ownership of all animals legally marked or branded.⁶ It also provides that such marks or brands are not lawful unless recorded.⁷ While it has been elsewhere held that, where the subject of branding is regulated by statute, an unrecorded brand is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving ownership, though perfectly proper so far as proving identity is concerned,⁸ in California, in a prosecution for larceny of animals, an unrecorded mark or brand found on the animal and identified as that used by the person alleged to be owner, is some evidence of his ownership.⁹ And in a prosecution for larceny of a sucking calf, unrecorded marks and brands upon the mother of the calf are some evidence as to ownership of the calf.¹⁰ Brands may be the subject of expert testimony, and a witness who shows sufficient knowledge about brands and cattle-marks to testify upon the subject may be examined as an expert, although he may not be familiar with particular brands used in certain counties.¹¹

§ 18. Changing or Defacing.—The Penal Code provides that every person who marks or brands, alters, or defaces the mark or brand of any horse, mare, jack, jennet, mule, bull, ox, steer, cow, or calf belonging to another, with the intent thereby to steal the same, or to prevent identification thereof by the true owner, is punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison for not less than one nor more than five years.¹² And every person who marks or brands, alters or defaces the mark or brand of any sheep, goat, hog, shoat, or pig belonging to another, with intent thereby to steal the same, or to prevent identification thereof by the true owner, is guilty of a misdemeanor.¹³ The crimes charged in these code sections are wholly distinct from the offense of larceny. They are not in any sense a necessary element of larceny and cannot be said to be necessarily included therein. Consequently, one cannot be convicted of them under an information charging the larceny of an animal, and after dismissal of the information charging larceny, one may be tried and convicted of the offense of altering brands of cattle, though the same evidence is used in both prosecutions.¹⁴

Under these code sections, one who in any way marks any animal therein named belonging to another, with intent thereby to prevent identification thereof by the true owner, is guilty of an offense, either a felony or a misdemeanor, depending upon the animal marked. It can make no difference that the mark placed on the animal is not of the character usually adopted for the purpose of indicating ownership, or that it may not accomplish the purpose of preventing identification. These are matters that may properly weigh with the jury in determining as to the intent with which the marking was done. It is the placing of any mark on such an animal, with the intent thereby to prevent identification by the true owner, that constitutes the crime. The word "marks" is not limited to some conventional artificial indication of ownership placed on an animal, and includes the slitting of the ears of a horse or colt, even though such mark is generally used simply to indicate a vicious animal. It includes as well marks which might be illegal under the provisions of the Political Code. In determining whether the statutory intent was involved, the circumstances surrounding the commission of the act are to be taken into consideration.¹⁵ To assist in the detection of crimes of this character; the code requires that any person, having knowledge of the unlawful mismarking or misbranding of stock not his own, or of the killing of stock running at large having a proper owner, shall give information thereof to some justice of peace of the proper county.¹⁶

§ 19. Indictment for Altering.—In an indictment charging the altering of a brand with intent to steal an animal, it is necessary, according to the strict common-law rule, to charge that the animal belonged to a particular individual or that the owner of the animal was known. Accordingly, it was held, prior to the enactment of the code, that an indictment was insufficient which charged the animal to belong to an estate of a decedent.¹⁷ This rule has been changed by the code provision to the effect that when an offense involves the commission of, or an attempt to commit, a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, is not material.¹⁸ So that now any error in this respect is unimportant.¹⁹

VII. TRESPASSING ANIMALS, ESTRAYS AND ANIMALS RUNNING AT LARGE.

Trespassing Animals Generally.

§ 20. Common-law Rule Repudiated.—Early in the history of California, the rule of the common law of England requiring an owner of animals to keep them on his own close did not prevail in any county of the state, and it does not prevail now,²⁰ except to the extent that statutes have been passed which have the effect of enacting the common-law rule.¹ The reason therefor is historical. Before the discovery of gold, this was exclusively a grazing country, and its only wealth consisted in vast herds of cattle, which were pastured exclusively upon uninclosed lands. This custom continued to prevail after the acquisition of the country by the United States, and has been in various instances recognized by the legislature.²

At the same session at which the act was passed adopting the common law of England so far as it is not repugnant to the constitution and statutes of the state, the legislature passed the act concerning marks and brands,³ and the act concerning lawful fences and animals trespassing on premises lawfully inclosed.⁴ At the following session, the legislature passed the act to regulate rodeos,⁵ and concerning judges of the plains.⁶ These statutes are clearly repugnant to this common-law rule, for, as has been said, if it were contemplated by the legislature that all such animals were to be confined to the close of the owner, where was the necessity for providing for a general herding of all the cattle of a neighborhood, after notice, in order that all might attend and each select his own, or of requiring cattle and horses to be branded before reaching a certain age, or the justice of providing that loss of crops destroyed by cattle should only be recovered by those whose farms are inclosed by a certain description of fence?⁷ These statutes though enacted before the code are still in full force and effect, except in so far as they have been amended or limited by subsequent legislation, for the Political Code provides that all acts in relation to lawful fences, estrays, and the trespassing of animals upon private property are recognized as continuing in force, notwithstanding the provisions of the codes.⁸

"To determine the law in any county, a special expedition through the uncharted wilderness of early local statutes is necessary." 7 Cal. Law Rev. 365.

California, agricultural and horticultural interests grew to be important factors in the promotion of the material prosperity of the state, the legislative policy with regard to trespassing animals was changed accordingly, and various special acts, or statutes applying to certain counties only, were enacted to meet the exigencies of the new conditions brought about by the introduction of those industries, which in effect restored the rules of the common law.⁹ Thus, with reference to Santa Clara County, it was enacted in substance that anyone finding stray domestic animals on his premises, or domestic animals running at large on a highway, whether the owner is known or unknown, may take them up, and proceed to sell them; and that any of such animals herded or found grazing upon a highway or upon private property, without the consent of the owner thereof shall be deemed and held to be estrays and animals running at large within the meaning of the act. "But nothing herein shall be construed so as to deprive any person of the rights to sue for damages for trespass by such animals."¹⁰ Under this statute an owner of land is not required to fence against his neighbor's cattle, and if the owner of cattle allowed them to stray upon the land of another, he is responsible for the damage done, whether the land is fenced or not. This statute gives to the owner of unfenced land the same remedy against trespassing animals of known ownership, that had theretofore been given only against estrays of unknown ownership. Consequently, its effect is to abolish the fence law in so far as it relates to Santa Clara County, and to revive the common-law rule there.¹¹ statute gave certain counties an election whether to be governed by the common-law rule.⁴

This was the state of the law at the time of the adoption of the constitution of 1879. These local acts were not repealed by that constitution, as they are not inconsistent with any provision thereof. Furthermore, the constitution expressly provides that all laws in force at the time of its adoption, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force until altered or repealed by the legislature.⁵ Neither have these acts been repealed by the Trespass Act of 1907,⁶ nor by the Estray Acts of 1897, 1901 and 1915, except perhaps to the extent that they relate to estrays.⁷

§ 22. Revival of Common-law Rule Since 1879.—After the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, no special laws were enacted and the law concerning trespassing animals in force in 1879 continued without change until the enactment of Estray Acts in 1897,⁸ 1901,⁹ and

Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo Counties were included in the act of 1874 [Stats. 1873-74, p. 50], and also in the subsequent act of March 7, 1878 [Stats. 1877-78, pp. 176, 878]. The two acts are conflicting in many points, and it follows that the former act is repealed by the latter, so far as it relates to Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo Counties, though there are no express words in the latter act repealing the former by name. Hanley v. Sixteen Horses etc., 97 Cal. 182, 32 Pac. 10; Hilton v. Hanly (Cal.), 32 Pac. 11. Though the court does not limit its language to these two counties, but states broadly that the act of 1874 has been repealed, the latter act has since been recognized as being in full force as to the other counties named therein. See Davis v. Blasingame (Cal. App.), 181 Pac. 104.

9. Stats. 1901, p. 603, amend. Stats. 1907, p. 132; Stats. 1909, p. 1079. In Blevins v. Mullally, 22 Cal. App. 519, 135 Pac. 307, the court says: "We are not impressed with the suggestion that the estray law of 1901, either in its original draft or as amended by the legisla-

1915.¹⁰ The act of 1915, unlike the acts of 1897 and 1901 as originally passed, authorized an owner of unfenced lands to take up estrays, both when the owner is unknown, and when he is known, and requires the giving of personal notice to the owner or custodian of the animal when known.¹¹ Consequently, like the Santa Clara act already referred to, the Estray Act of 1915 gives an owner of unfenced lands the same remedy against trespassing animals of known ownership, that formerly was given against animals of unknown ownership, and has the effect of restoring the common law in the entire state, with the exception of the six counties specifically named therein, to wit, Trinity, Shasta, Del Norte, Siskiyou, Lassen and Modoc. It is true the statute does not specifically repeal the fence laws and acts concerning trespassing animals, but it expressly saves the fence laws so far as they relate to the six counties named, thereby raising an implication of the repeal of those acts as to the counties not named.¹²

In 1919, it was enacted that it is unlawful for any person to herd or graze livestock on the lands of another in the counties of Plumas, Lassen and Modoc, without having first obtained the consent of the owner of the land.¹³ And at the same session of the legislature, an act was passed which authorized any county, except the six named in the act of 1915, to restore the fence law, if at an election a majority of the electors declare in favor thereof.¹⁴ These Estray Acts of 1897, 1901, and 1915 do not repeal the local acts restoring the ture of 1909, had the effect of reviving the common-law rule as to trespassing animals in California." This statement was disapproved and held to be dictum in Montezuma Improvement Co. v. Simmerly (Cal.), 189 Pac. 100.

common law in particular counties, so far as they forbid the trespassing of animals upon private property and allow an action of damages therefor, as the district court of appeal, subsequent to these general estray acts, has in three instances applied the local acts so as to uphold actions for damages and to enjoin trespasses.¹⁵ But it is probable that these local acts have been repealed in so far as they are estray acts.¹⁶

§ 23. Rule Under Fence Laws.—The rule as to animals running at large, in those counties not affected by statutes reviving the common law is declared in the fence law of 1855,¹⁷ by an act of 1907 concerning trespassing animals upon private lands,¹⁸ and by some local acts,¹⁹ and acts relating to the herding of particular animals.²⁰ The Fence

an owner of cattle is not responsible in damages, if his cattle, while ranging at large, stray on to the uninclosed lands of another, without the agency, knowledge or consent of the former.⁵ If the land trespassed upon is inclosed by a lawful fence, the owner or occupant of the land may recover damages in an action therefor,⁶ or he may take up the cattle and obtain restitution under the estray laws.⁷ But he is not obliged to take them up. He may drive them off.⁸ In that event, it is the duty of the owner of the cattle to take care of them. He cannot refuse them all care, and then on their perishing from his neglect, or otherwise, recover their value from the person turning them from the premises. Even if the occupant of the land is not entitled to the possession of the land and is guilty of a trespass, he would not be liable, where it does not appear that the loss was the direct consequence of his acts.⁹

§ 24. Rule Under "No Fence" Laws.—The various statutes, which have been construed to be a re-enactment of the common-law rule of trespassing animals, frequently provide in substance that it is unlawful for any animal, the property of any person, to enter upon any land owned by or lawfully in the possession of any person other than the owner of such animal. By this rule, it is not the duty of one to fence his land against the cattle of his neighbor. On the contrary, every man is bound to keep his beasts within his own close under penalty of answering in dam-

Hill*, 104 Cal. 184, 37 Pac. 893, where the court says: "It is not alleged that the trespasses were instigated by the defendants [the owners of the cattle] nor that they had notice thereof."

ages for all injuries resulting from their being permitted to trespass on the land of another.¹⁰ It is immaterial, whether the land trespassed upon is inclosed or uninclosed,¹¹ for the word "close" is purely technical, and relates to the interest in the soil and to its invisible boundaries, and not to those artificial barriers often erected around land.¹² Since, under such laws, there is no duty resting on the occupant of the land to maintain fences, the fact that he does not keep a fence inclosing the land in repair, or fails to keep the gates closed, does not preclude his recovery for the damage sustained.¹³ If beasts have roving and destructive propensities, it is the owner's duty to take commensurate precautions to prevent their escape on the range upon which they are placed. Reasonable care on account of their known disposition requires the exercise of greater diligence concerning them than is required relative to ordinary range cattle.¹⁴ While under this rule an owner of cattle is liable when his cattle trespass on the land of another, he is, on the other hand, entitled to at least nominal damages, if they are excluded from land where he has a right to have them.¹⁵

§ 25. Trespasses on Inclosed Lands Planted to Crops. In 1907, a statute was enacted making it unlawful for anyone owning, or having possession, of any animal, to suffer or permit such animal to break into and enter upon any land of another which is planted to growing crops, vines, fruit trees or vegetables, and is at the time entirely inclosed by a substantial fence or other inclosure. The owner or occupant is authorized to recover his damages in a court of competent jurisdiction, and, to allow him better security for the payment of any judgment recovered, it is provided that he may have an attachment without the filing of an affidavit of attachment, and that no animal shall be exempt from attachment or execution to satisfy a judgment for trespass committed by such animal.¹⁶

This statute is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the common-law rule relating to trespassing animals, but it is itself the common-law rule as applied or limited to certain special cases, namely cases where the land is inclosed and is planted to crops, vines, fruit trees or vegetables. It has been said that the remedy so provided by the statute is neither summary nor extraordinary. It is the plain, ordinary remedy for the recovery of damages for trespass upon lands embraced by it, with added features to afford the plaintiff better security for the payment of any judgment he may recover.¹⁷ It is a general rule that the act of 1907 does not operate to repeal statutes reviving the common-law rule in certain counties.¹⁸ It has been held that this statute is applicable only to those counties in which the common-law rule is not in force, and has for its purpose the providing of a remedy for trespasses which, in its scope, is limited according to the requirements of existing conditions in those counties. While it might be Impounding Estrays, Trespassing Animals and Animals Running at Large.

§ 26. Estrays and Trespassing Animals Distinguished. Properly speaking, there is a clear-cut distinction between estrays and trespassing animals, the former including only wandering domestic animals with unknown owners, and the latter animals with known owners.²⁰ The term "estrays" is, however, sometimes used in a broader sense to include trespassing animals with known owners. This use was recognized in the early stray law of 1851, which provided that no animal should be considered an stray if the owner is known to the person finding it.¹ Later stray acts treated estrays and trespassing animals alike and gave the same remedy against each. But the present act, while relating to both and giving the same remedy against each, clearly distinguished between them, by requiring a different notice in case the owner is known, than is required when he is unknown.² Under a statute forbidding the pasturing of stock upon a public highway, and authorizing the taking up of such stock,³ or a statute declaring animals herded or found grazing on a highway to be estrays whether accompanied by a herder or not,⁴ have strayed upon, or been found upon, lands other than those of their owner, or the public domain, or lands whose owner (or to which the person in possession thereof), has consented, may be passed over, or allowed to be entered on, by such animal."

it is apparent that cattle passing over or along a public road in charge of a herder, and not being on the road for the purpose of being pastured there are not estrays within the meaning of the statute. Nor do cattle so passing along a highway in charge of a herder become estrays because they should, in passing, casually eat the grass growing at the roadside, or because the herder may have fallen asleep for the moment and the cattle are found pastured on both sides of the road.⁵

§ 27. Right to Distrain and Impound.— Among the private wrongs, which, at common law, might be redressed by the mere act of the party injured, was that occasioned by animals of another, taken damage feasant, that is, doing hurt or damage to the party by treading his grass and the like.⁶ The Estray Act of 1851 authorized any one finding an estray to take it up, to make report of the fact to a justice of the peace, and upon a prescribed procedure have from its sale, or from the owner, the finder's costs.⁷ But inasmuch as the common-law rule of trespassing animals did not prevail in this state, an owner of land was not authorized to distrain trespassing animals with known owners until the act of 1855 gave him the right to do so, as to animals trespassing on fenced lands. This act authorized the distrainer to post the animals under the estray laws and to recover for all damages done by them, as well as the expense of keeping and posting them.⁸ The Estray Act of 1851 is superseded by the present estray acts.⁹ But the act of 1855 is still in force in the counties in which the common-law rule does not prevail.¹⁰ The act of 1915 prevails in the remaining counties, other than such as may be governed by special acts still in force,¹¹ or, by an election, may have decided to be governed by the act of 1919.¹²

By the act of 1915, any person finding any estray animal, whether the owner is known or unknown, upon his premises, or the premises to which he has the right of possession, whether fenced or unfenced, or upon highways adjacent thereto, may take up the same and have a lien thereon for all expenses incurred and costs in keeping and caring for such animals.¹³ The act of 1919 is substantially the same as the act of 1915, except that the word "premises" as used therein means land entirely inclosed with a good substantial fence, and does not apply to unfenced lands.¹⁴ Under an act authorizing the taking up of animals found trespassing upon the premises of any person, it is necessary, as at common law, that the animals be taken up while damage feasant on the land of the person taking them up.¹⁵

§ 28. Constitutionality of Statutes.—Statutes merely authorizing animals damage feasant to be impounded until the damage they have committed, and the cost of keeping them shall be paid, are not unconstitutional as in violation of the provision against taking property without due process of law. The temporary seizure and holding of the property awaiting judicial action is not a bereaving or a divesting of the owner of his property and is not forbidden. Property may be attached and held to be disposed of by judicial action and judgment by such process, or by such agents without process, as the legislature may direct. It is within the province of the legislature to regulate the remedies for trespass on lands, and it is not in excess of legislative power to give to the party injured a lien upon the animals found trespassing.¹⁶ As to the further question, whether the legislature has power to authorize an officer without any proceedings at law to sell animals taken damage feasant, and apply the proceeds to the payment of damages and costs, California courts have several times raised the question, but they have not as yet decided it.¹⁷

§ 29. Rights of Parties and Lien of Distrainer.—The estray laws give a lien on animals taken up by virtue of their provisions for all expenses incurred and costs in keeping and caring for such animals taken up, with a right of possession until the owner of the stock tenders the amount to which the distrainer is entitled under the statute,¹⁸ or if such tender is not made, for such time as the statute prescribes. While in possession of the animals, the distrainer may not work or use them.¹⁹ He is required to use reasonable care to preserve them from injury, but if they die or escape from his possession he is not liable for damages.²⁰ The owner of the animals may contest the distrainer's right to retain possession of them by an action of replevin.¹ But when he is dissatisfied with the amount charged for costs and expenses, he is required by the statute to tender the proper amount to the dis-

trainer before suing to recover possession of the animals.² If such tender is not made before action brought, the owner is not entitled to the possession of his animals at the time of bringing his action, unless the distrainer has waived his right to insist on his lien.³ The statute which creates the lien does not, however, undertake to keep it alive indefinitely. The distrainer may hold the property for thirty days after giving the notice prescribed by law, and then if it is not redeemed, he must notify the proper officer who shall proceed to sell it. And in accordance with the general rule that one having a mere lien waives his right thereto by asserting a claim other than that of lien, such as a claim of ownership, it has been held that a distrainer is deemed to have waived or lost his lien, if he claims ownership of the animals distrained under a void sale, and on that ground refuses to deliver them.⁴

§ 30. Enforcement of Lien.—By the common law, animals when taken damage feasant were held by the distrainer as security to compel satisfaction. He could not sell them and could only hold them until the owner made satisfaction or contested his right thereto by a replevin. As was said by Blackstone: "This kind of distress, though it puts the owner to inconvenience, and is, therefore, a punishment to him, yet, if he continues obstinate and will make no satisfaction of payment, it is no remedy at all to the distrainer."⁵ California statutes, like those of most, if not all, the states, supply this defect of the common law, and prescribe a method by which the distrainer may foreclose his lien.⁶ The remedy afforded by the statute is speedy and summary,⁷ and the statutes, as all others prescribing modes

by which a party may be divested of his property without his consent, must be strictly construed.⁸ It is necessary that a party who claims to have acquired a right and title to property by virtue of its provisions as against the original owner, affirmatively allege and prove that the mode prescribed by statute for the acquisition of such title, has, in every particular, been strictly followed.⁹ A failure to follow the statute renders a sale of the animal void. Thus, a sale is void and passes no title if the period intervening between the filing of notice with the recorder, and the advertising of the animals for sale is less than that fixed by the statute.¹⁰ So, also, the sale is void when the notice of sale is not given for the statutory period.¹¹ In either case, the owner of the animals may recover possession of them from the purchaser by an action of replevin.¹²

Under the Estray Act of 1915 two methods of giving notice of the taking up of such animals are provided. One is by filing a prescribed written statement with the recorder or poundkeeper, and, in certain cases, by publishing said statement in a newspaper. The other, which applies only to cases in which the finder knows the owner or person having charge of the animal or animals, requires the statement to be served upon the owner or custodian.¹³ In this particular the act differs essentially from the act of 1901 and its predecessors, which either applied only to "estrays," properly speaking (that is, animals without known owners), or to estrays and trespassing animals with known owners, treating all alike and providing for no special notice to known owners.¹⁴

§ 31. Animals Running at Large.—Ordinances prohibiting the running at large within the limits of towns and cities of horses, cows, sheep, hogs, and other useful domestic animals, and authorizing their impounding when found so running at large, and even their sale, if not redeemed, have been enacted by some cities and towns. Such ordinances, while perhaps restricting to some extent the ownership of such animals within the limits of such cities and towns, are upheld as a wholesome exercise of police power.¹⁵ The purpose of such ordinances is the regulation of the use and management of the animals, rather than the restriction of or interference with ownership.¹⁶ “Running at large” within the meaning of such ordinances, means strolling without restraint, or confinement, or wandering, roving, or rambling at will unrestrained.¹⁷ Animals which are in charge of and are being herded by a competent person are not “running at large” within the meaning of such an ordinance. Even when the herder is a boy, the animals are not “running at large,” when it is shown that he is competent to control them.¹⁸

Recovery of Damages and Enjoining Trespass.

§ 32. Recovery of Damages in General.—An owner or person in lawful possession of land which has been unlawfully trespassed upon by animals belonging to another may recover his damages in a civil action for trespass.¹⁹ As has already been seen, he may, in those counties in which the common-law rule does not prevail, maintain such an action only when his land is fenced.²⁰ In other counties, he may maintain such an action, whether or not his land is fenced.¹ The various local acts restoring the common-law rule in particular counties, invariably provide that the party injured may maintain an action for damages.² On the other hand, the Estray Act, which restored the common law to those counties not covered by special acts, does not prescribe any damages collectible for injury done, but merely provides a scale of payment to the distrainer of trespassing animals for his expenses in caring for them.³ It is a general rule that statutes of this character provide a special remedy by action against property in rem, and they do not purport to exclude the right of the owner of the land to proceed by personal action against the owner of the stock. In other words, in such cases the stock may be distrained damage feasant, or the ordinary action for the actual damage suffered by the owner of the land may be brought.⁴ Under the act of 1874, there is no right to bring an action of damages, if the owner or occupant of the land has availed himself of the summary remedy therein provided for. And since a party injured by a continuous trespass is not authorized to divide it up into several causes of action, he cannot divide the animals trespassing on his land into parcels, and maintain distress proceedings as to a part and an action of trespass as to the remainder.⁵ Where a limitation is fixed by the statute only to the remedy in rem, the person injured is not restricted to the period of the limitation in which to bring an action for damages.⁶ Upon the same principle, the plaintiff in his action is not confined in his proofs to trespasses committed by the defendant's cattle within a similar period prior to the commencement of his action.⁷

§ 33. "Lawful Possession" of Plaintiff.—The various acts relating to trespassing animals usually provide in substance that the owner of or person who is in the lawful possession of any land trespassed upon by animals is entitled to recover, by action, the damages sustained thereby.⁸ The "lawful possession" mentioned in these statutes means only peaceable or quiet possession, contradistinguished from possession which is not merely constructively tortious but actually so.⁹ A lessee of land is in lawful possession within the meaning of the statute. And when by the terms of a lease, the lessee agrees to harvest the crops at his own expense and in due and proper time give the landlord a certain proportion, the lessee and the landlord do not become owners in common of the crops. The tenant is the owner and may recover the entire damage sustained. The landlord has no claim upon the crop until an actual division is made and his share is turned over to him as rent.¹⁰ Though the act authorizes an action by one lawfully in possession of land, the fact of possession is a mere incident and not the basis of the action. Therefore, the action does not involve the right to possession of real property within the meaning of the provision denying a justice of the peace jurisdiction of actions involving the possession of real property.¹¹

§ 34. Proceedings in Action.—When suing for damages for injuries caused by trespassing animals, the owner or occupant of the land must allege a cause of action in accordance with the general rules governing actions of trespass.¹² Under the fence laws in general, a complaint is sufficient which shows actual possession by the plaintiff of certain land and premises inclosed by a good and substantial inclosure, and an unlawful entry thereon by the defendant with cattle, with which he, against the consent of the plaintiff, depastured the land to plaintiff's damage.¹³ Under the act of 1907, it is necessary to show also that the land was planted to crops, vines, fruit trees, or vegetables.¹⁴ If the complaint is otherwise sufficient, its sufficiency is not affected by an allegation that the trespasses alleged were contrary to other statutes. Such an allegation is surplusage, and may be stricken out on motion, or, in the absence thereof, disregarded.¹⁵ As tending to show the extent of his injury, the plaintiff may prove that, by reason of the trespass, it was necessary for him to feed his stock with hay.¹⁶ It has been held that, since the action is in form ex delicto, it is error for the court to give an instruction as to the implication of a promise on the part of the owner of the stock to pay whatever damages may have been sustained by the trespass.¹⁷ While damages for injury done by cattle not belonging to the defendant cannot be awarded, the evidence of the presence of other cattle may be so indefinite and uncertain, that the court may be warranted in finding that the damage caused by such cattle is too trivial and inconsequential to affect the substantive damage caused by the continuous trespassing of the defendant's cattle.¹⁸

§ 35. Action in Rem.—The act of 1878 provides that when the owner of trespassing animals is not known, the animals shall be liable for the damage done, and the party injured may bring an action in rem directly against the trespassing animal or lot of animals trespassing at the same or different times, whether of the same or different marks or brands.¹⁹ The act further provides that the person injured "may at his option, distrain and take into his possession any trespassing animal . . . and keep the same two days without instituting legal proceedings under this act," so that he may have proper time in which to make the necessary inquiries as to the ownership of the animals and determine which remedy he is entitled to.²⁰ Construing a similar statute authorizing the bringing of the action in a justice's court, it was held that it plainly appears that the distrainer is to have a lien on the animals for his damages and the cost of keeping, and though the action to enforce the lien is designated a proceeding in rem and is so in form, it is in substance and effect a proceeding in equity to enforce the lien. Thus construed, the statute was held void, as an attempt to confer equitable powers on a justice of the peace.¹ This objection was eliminated in the act of 1878. The right to distrain given by this act is an option given the land owner which he may exercise without instituting any legal proceedings whatever. But this right is limited to two days, at which time he must commence his action and he can then attach the animals in whichever form of action he brings. His detention then expires, and the animals are in the custody of the law under the attachment only.² Although the action may be brought against animals trespassing at the same or different times, whether they have the same or different brands, an owner is responsible only for damages done by his own cattle, not for those done by cattle over which he has no control. Consequently, in an action in rem against cattle bearing different brands in which an owner of certain of the cattle appears, the damages caused by his cattle should be distinctly found.³

§ 36. Enjoining Trespass.—An owner or occupant of land in those counties where the common law of trespassing animals has been restored, may obtain an injunction against the trespassing of animals, where the remedy at law is inadequate, as where the injury is irreparable, because the property destroyed, the herbage or feed, cannot be replaced so as to accomplish the immediate purpose for which it was being used, that of feeding the plaintiff's cattle, or where repeated acts of trespass necessitate a multiplicity of actions at law for damages. In the former case, where the injury is or would be irreparable, the trespass may be enjoined though it be a single act. In the latter case, where repeated acts of trespass are committed, an injunction may be granted, though each of the acts taken by itself may not be destructive, and the legal remedy may be adequate for each single act if it stood alone. The facts in a particular case may be such, that jurisdiction can be justly invoked on both grounds.⁴ The right to an injunction, as has been seen, is unaffected by the fact that the Estray Act of 1915, which has been held to

§ 37. Liability in General.—It is not unlawful for a person to keep wild or ferocious animals,⁶ but it is the duty of one, who knows or is presumed to know, that animals kept by him are vicious, to guard them securely, and in such a manner as to prevent the occurrence of injury to others through such vicious acts as they are inclined to commit.⁷ The responsibility of an owner or keeper of animals for injuries inflicted by them is the same whether the animal is a wild animal, or is a domestic animal known by its owner or keeper to be vicious; the only difference between the responsibility for injuries inflicted by wild animals and those inflicted by domestic animals being that in the former case, wild animals are presumed to be vicious,⁸ and the owner is presumed to have knowledge of their mischievous disposition;⁹ whereas in the latter case, it is necessary to prove that the animal was vicious, and that the owner or keeper knew it,¹⁰ except, of course, where the gist of the action is negligence.¹¹ However established, this knowledge is the same in substance and works the same results.¹² If, therefore, a domestic animal of peaceable disposition, while in charge of a master or of a servant, suddenly and unexpectedly, either through fear or rage, inflicts injury, neither is responsible, if at the time he was in the exercise of due care.¹³ But, conversely, the owner of such an animal knowing its vicious propensities is liable for injury inflicted by it upon property or upon the person of one who is free from fault,¹⁴ for the reason that under such circumstances it is the duty of the owner to anticipate that such animals will commit such vicious acts as opportunity offers, and to guard against such acts.¹⁵ He, like the owner of a wild animal, is an insurer of the acts of the animal to one who is injured without fault. He keeps the animal at his own risk,¹⁶ and is liable irrespective of the question of negligence.¹⁷ In either case, the gist of the action is the keeping of the animal with knowledge of its vicious propensities.¹⁸ It is essential, of course, to liability in all such cases, as in actions for negligence generally, that the occurrence be the efficient, proximate and producing cause of the injury or injuries complained of.¹⁹

A person may be not only civilly liable for injuries inflicted by an animal, but he is guilty of a felony if, knowing its mischievous propensities, he willfully suffers it to go at large, or keeps it without ordinary care, and the animal kills any human being who has exercised due precaution.²⁰

§ 38. Imputed Knowledge.—Where an animal is possessed of a ferocious disposition, a servant's or agent's knowledge of such disposition is knowledge of the master, when the servant or agent is intrusted with or has charge or control of the animal.²¹ But where a servant is charged with no duty in the matter, his knowledge of the vicious propensities of an animal owned by the master is not notice to the master.¹ Stated more fully, when knowledge of the ferocious disposition of a domesticated animal is brought home to an agent or servant employed about the animal, whose duty, as such agent or servant, requires him, if he knows of the vicious character of the animal, to act in respect thereof, toward third persons, or toward the animal, for the protection of third persons, such knowledge, though not imparted to the master, is imputed to him, in any matter involving a breach of such duty.² In accordance with this rule, when servants are put in complete charge of an animal, they stand in the performance of their task in the place of the master, and the test of responsibility is: What would have been the master's responsibility and liability had he personally been in charge of the animal?³ It is immaterial however subordinate or menial may be the rank of the servant, for in that special employment he represents the master and within its scope, his knowledge is the master's knowledge, his acts the master's acts.⁴ Thus, when an owner of horses keeps no responsible person in charge of his stables, and the foreman simply visits the stables occasionally, the knowledge of the stableman whose duty it is to feed and harness the animals is knowledge of the owner within the rule.⁵

§ 39. Contributory Negligence, and Representations of Owner as to Animal.—The general rule of law, which prevails in all actions for negligence, that the plaintiff cannot recover if his own negligence contributed to produce his injury, applies to actions for injuries inflicted by vicious animals. While the burden of the duty to exercise the highest degree of care rests upon the owner of an animal which is wild or known to be vicious, yet, he is exonerated from liability, if the injured party imprudently or negligently places himself in a position to be attacked, or, by his own negligence contributed to his injury.⁶ Thus, the negligence of a youth in walking under a rope guarding animal-cages at a circus precludes recovery for injuries inflicted by one of the animals, when it is shown that he is bright, and knew that the animals were dangerous, and that the guard-rope was placed there to keep spectators from getting too close to the cages.⁷

An owner or keeper of a horse or other animal does not, by representing it to be gentle, thereby become an insurer of the gentleness of the animal toward one who is induced to alter his position with reference to the animal. The owner or keeper is not liable unless, in addition to his representation contrary to the fact, he either knows the representation to be false, or has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true, and unless he makes the representation for the purpose of inducing the injured party to act as he did. The mere fact that the animal became unmanageable does not prove the statement is untrue.⁸

§ 40. Injuries to Servant.—The duty of protection against vicious animals, wild or domestic, is not one owing to the public only, but it extends as well to those dealing with or standing in some relation to the owner, those only being excluded from its operation who are themselves in fault. In other words, the duty of protection extends to servants of the owner of an animal as well as to the public in general.⁹ The rights and duties of an owner of animals and of a servant employed to attend them are governed by the general rules governing the relation of master and servant, and so it is held to be the duty of a master to warn his servants of perils of which he is or ought to be aware, other than such as they should have foreseen as necessarily incident to the business, in the natural and ordinary course of affairs.¹⁰ In accordance with these rules, a person employed to drive horses which are not vicious, is held to assume the risk of being injured by them, when the owner has not failed in some duty to the person injured.¹¹ When the horses or other domestic animals are vicious, and the owner knows, but the servant is ignorant of this fact, it is the duty of the owner to warn the servant of his danger.¹² If the servant is warned of the vicious character of the animal, and with knowledge of the danger proceeds with his work, he must be presumed to have taken upon himself the risk of the danger which he incurred, and he cannot hold his employer liable for injury received in consequence thereof.¹³ But conversely, if the master fails to warn the servant, he is responsible in damages for injuries inflicted by such vicious animals. It, therefore, is of the essence of a servant's case, that he is ignorant of the viciousness of the animal until the injury has occurred.¹⁴

Under the doctrine of imputed knowledge, if the vicious disposition is known to an employee whose duty it is to attend the animals and take care that no person is injured thereby, the master would be responsible if such employee failed to warn another employee ignorant of his danger, and carelessly suffered him to go near enough to the animal to be injured by it. The fact that the employee who possessed knowledge of the animal's disposition is a fellow-servant of the person injured is immaterial, since the obligation from them is on behalf of their employer to warn the party of his danger. . In discharging this duty, the employee would have represented his principal and would not have been acting as a fellow-servant.¹⁵

With reference to the extent of the warning it is clear that an employer is not required to give his employee minute directions as to the character of the danger he incurs in driving a vicious animal and as to the means of avoiding them, if any there be, when the employee himself has experience in such matters. An argument that the animal in question is unusually vicious, and that the employee did not appreciate the full extent of his danger, is not sustainable unless it appears that the master had knowledge of this fact, for if the employer was not aware of the danger, he would not be negligent in directing the servant to act in a manner apparently without danger.¹⁶

§ 41. Negligence as Ground of Liability.—The liability of the owner of an animal for injuries inflicted by it may be predicated upon negligence of himself or his servant in caring for the animal, as well as upon the ground of the keeping of an animal known to be vicious.¹⁷ When the cause of action is founded upon negligence, it is immaterial whether or not the animal inflicting the injury has a vicious disposition,¹⁸ and whether the owner has knowledge thereof.¹⁹ Inasmuch as the driving of cattle through the streets of a populous town or city, is ordinarily attended with danger to the lives and limbs of persons who have a right to be there, the law requires of the owners and managers of that business the utmost care and diligence. Under the law governing such cases, if a person sustains injury without fault on his part, the negligence is, prima facie, that of the defendant, upon whom the burden is then cast to show that the injury occurred without fault on his part.²⁰ So, also, if an owner of stock permits his stock to run at large on public streets he is liable for injuries caused thereby, unless the person injured is guilty of contributory negligence. And when the person injured is a child, the mere fact that he was allowed to play in the street at the time does not constitute such negligence as precludes recovery, especially when the street is comparatively unfrequented.¹

§ 42. Negligence of Servant.—The rule that a master is liable for negligence of a servant within the scope of his employment is applicable to cases where an owner of animals intrusts them to a servant.² Thus, where it is a part of the task of a servant to drive an animal upon a highway, the master is liable if in the performance of this duty injury results to one without fault by reason of the servant's negligence. If at the commencement of this undertaking the animal unexpectedly attacked and injured some person, it may well be argued that the servant was exercising due care and the master is not liable. But if during employment, he acquires knowledge of the vicious character of the animal, and fails to exercise requisite care thereafter, the master would be liable, though at the time the task was begun, neither knew of the animal's vicious disposition.³ As tending to show the exercise of due care, it has been held that, when the circumstances are such as to require the exercise of the highest degree of care, the master may show that the servant in charge of animals at the time an injury was done was a person of experience and competent skill, though proof of this fact alone might not be sufficient to exonerate the master of all liability.⁴ It is, however, well settled in this state, that evidence of this character is not admissible when the circumstances do not require the defendant to exercise more than ordinary care, as in a case where the servant of the defendant is driving a team on the highway. In such case the issue is whether or not the servant exercised ordinary care at the time of the accident. Evidence of the character of the servant as a careful driver would not tend to show that he was exercising due care at the time, and is therefore inadmissible.⁵ In such case the inquiry is as to the quantum of proof required and not as to the materiality or relevancy of the evidence.⁶

§ 43. Actions—Pleading—Evidence.—In an action for injuries inflicted by a domestic animal, the gist of which is the keeping of an animal with knowledge of its vicious propensities, the complaint must allege the viciousness of the animal and the defendant's knowledge thereof,⁷ the fact of the injury and damage,⁸ and if the person injured is a servant employed to attend the animals, his ignorance of the viciousness of the animals until he was injured.⁹

If the animal which inflicted the injury is a wild animal, it is unnecessary to allege the owner's knowledge of its viciousness, as he is presumed to have such knowledge.¹⁰

In neither case is it necessary to allege negligence on the part of the defendant, and if such an averment is made it will be treated as surplusage.¹¹

The viciousness of the animal which injured the plaintiff may be shown by specific acts of viciousness.¹²

The mere fact that the animal became unmanageable, and injured the plaintiff, is not sufficient to prove it vicious or generally unsafe,¹³ nor is it sufficient proof of viciousness to detail the behavior of the animal under extraordinary circumstances.¹⁴

While the knowledge of the owner or keeper of an animal may be shown by evidence of prior specific instances of viciousness brought home to him, or a servant in charge of the animal,¹⁵ or by an admission of knowledge of viciousness,¹⁶ admissions by a servant following the injury complained of, are not, it has been held, competent evidence of the owner's knowledge at the time of the injury, especially where the servant was never empowered to speak for the owner.¹⁷

When the gist of an action for injuries done by an animal is negligence, it is not necessary to allege that the owner had knowledge of the vicious propensity of the animal, as such matters are immaterial when negligence is alleged.¹⁸ But if both grounds of action are without objection included in the same pleading, the complaint contains two distinct causes of action, and the court in instructing the jury should clearly recognize the distinction between them.¹⁹

IX. INJURIES AND CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

§ 44. Civil Liability for Injuries to Animals.—If one unlawfully and unjustifiably injures or kills the animals of another, he is of course, liable in damages to the owner,²⁰ and if he inflicts the injuries willfully or by gross negligence, in disregard of humanity, exemplary damages may be awarded against him.¹ One is liable for injuries to animals not only when such injuries are inflicted by himself, but he is liable also when such injuries are inflicted by vicious animals owned by him and known by him to be vicious.² The fact that the animal killed or injured is trespassing on the land of the defendant is no justification for killing or injuring it, whether the act is done in a county in which the common law of trespassing animals governs, or in a county where such law does not prevail. While under the fence laws, as has been seen, the owner or occupant of land may drive cattle off his land,³ he has no right to kill, maim, or materially hurt or injure any animal upon his grounds, whether or not they are inclosed by a lawful fence, and he is liable in damages if he does so.⁴

In those counties in which the common-law rule as to trespassing animals is repudiated, and where it is the custom to permit domestic animals to roam at large upon the uninclosed commons, the owner commits no unlawful act in permitting them to run at large, and when they stray upon uninclosed railroad tracks and are injured or killed, he is not deemed to be guilty of such contributory negligence as precludes recovering their value from the railroad company.⁵ While formerly it was necessary in the latter case to prove negligence on the part of the railroad company, the present law requires railroad corporations to fence their tracks, and makes them liable irrespective of negligence, if they fail to do so.⁶ In an action to recover damages for injury to the plaintiff's cattle, the defendant may file a cross-complaint seeking damages for trespasses of the plaintiff's cattle upon the defendant's land, when the defendant's cause of action relates to or depends upon the transaction upon which the action is brought. To show the relationship of the cross-demand to the plaintiff's demand, it must be alleged that the wrongs alleged in the complaint were done on the defendant's land or that the plaintiff's animals were found damage feasant on his land. If this is not shown, the cross-complaint is demurrable.⁷

§ 45. Criminal Liability.—It is a misdemeanor for any person to maliciously kill, maim, or wound an animal, the property of another,⁸ and to willfully or negligently, while hunting upon the inclosed lands of another, kill, maim, or wound an animal the property of another.⁹ The code also provides that every person who willfully administers any poison to an animal, the property of another, or maliciously exposes any poisonous substance with intent that the same shall be taken or swallowed by any such animal, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding three years, or in the county jail not exceeding one year, and a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars.¹⁰ These offenses, in accordance with the general rules governing indictments and informations, may be charged in the language of the statute. In charging the latter offense, it is not necessary to state that the act was feloniously done. Nor is it necessary to specifically name the poisonous substance or state that it was a substance that would kill. It is sufficient, for example, to charge that the defendant did willfully, unlawfully, and maliciously expose a poisonous substance in a watering-trough of A B, with intent, then and there, that the same should be taken and swallowed by the horses of said A B, contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute, etc. On conviction of the latter offense, the court may sentence the defendant to imprisonment in the state prison, and it has been held that this may be done notwithstanding the fact that in the information and in the judgment the offense is designated as "malicious mischief in putting a poisonous substance, " etc.¹¹

§ 46. Cruelty as an Offense.—Cruelty to animals was not indictable as an offense at common law, however brutally or cruelly the animals were abused. Within comparatively modern times, man has assumed a more humane attitude toward brute creation, and, as a result, statutes now generally prevail making cruelty to animals a criminal offense.¹² In California, cruelty to animals is made a misdemeanor. Just what acts constitute the offense and are punishable as such, are specifically enumerated in the code. Thus, it is provided in substance, that every person who overdrives, overloads, drives when overloaded, overworks, tortures, torments, deprives of necessary sustenance, drink or shelter, cruelly beats, mutilates, or cruelly kills any animals or causes these acts to be done; and whoever, having the charge or custody of any animal, either as owner or otherwise, subjects any animal to needless suffering, or inflicts unnecessary cruelty upon the same, or in any manner abuses any animal, or fails to provide the same with proper food, drink, shelter or protection from the weather, or who drives, rides or otherwise uses the same when unfit for labor, is for every such offense guilty of a misdemeanor.¹³ The code and statutes also forbid numerous other specific acts referred to in the notes below.¹⁴ Unlike the common law, by which the offense was not indictable, unless perhaps the circumstances were such as to constitute the crime of malicious mischief, or in other words, unless malice toward the owner of the animal existed, present statutes have for their purpose the protection of the animals themselves, and therefore malice toward the owner is not an element of the offense.¹⁵ Neither is malice toward the animal, or an intent or purpose to torture or torment it, a necessary element of the offense of torturing or tormenting; one is guilty who willfully and knowingly does acts which necessarily cause an animal torture, torment, or great pain.¹⁶ Under a prior code provision declaring everyone guilty of a misdemeanor who maliciously and cruelly beats, tortures or injures an animal, malice was an essential ingredient of the offense. But the statute was satisfied where the acts constituting cruelty were willfully and unlawfully done, and therefore, a complaint, under this act, has been held sufficient to charge an offense, which alleged the willful and unlawful beating of an animal, though it omitted the word "malicious."¹⁷

§ 47. Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty.—The code authorizes the formation of societies for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals.¹⁸ Such societies may receive and dispose of property, both real and personal,¹⁹ and may by resolution appoint humane officers.²⁰ Any such society or any member or officer thereof may prefer complaints against persons for the violation of any law affecting or relating to children or animals and aid in the prosecution of any such offender,¹ and the humane officers after qualifying have power lawfully to interfere to prevent the perpetration of any act of cruelty upon any dumb animal, and to use such force as is necessary. They may make arrests for violations of penal laws relating to dumb animals in the same manner as a constable or other peace officer, and they may carry such weapons as peace officers are authorized to carry, except that in certain cities and counties written permission so to do must be first granted by the board of police commissioners.² Whether such permission shall be given is entirely discretionary with the board of peace commissioners, and its discretion in this respect cannot be controlled by mandamus.³ Humane officers may enter any place where there is an exhibition of fighting birds or animals, and without a warrant arrest all persons present.⁴ And it is their duty to take possession of animals abandoned or neglected in cities and townships and to care for them. If such animal is sick, disabled, infirm or crippled, it may be killed if, after due search, no owner can be found. Such officers may also take charge of any animal that by reason of lameness, sickness, feebleness, or neglect, is unfit for the labor it is performing, or that in any other manner is being cruelly treated.⁵ And they may notify owners of animals unfit for work to kill them, and on order of a court or magistrate, kill such animal.⁶ Compensation of societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals may be paid by the governing body of the city, or city and county or county where such society exists.⁷ And in addition thereto, the surplus remaining after the satisfaction of certain liens from acts done to prevent cruelty to animals, must, if the owner of the animal is unknown, be paid into the treasury of the humane society of the county or city and county where the sale takes place.⁸

no intrinsic value, and were regarded as being kept only through the whim or caprice of their owner.¹⁰ They were not the subject of larceny, for the reason that such crime was punishable by death, and it was not considered proper that a man should die for the larceny of a dog.¹¹ But except in the case of larceny, a dog was property at the common law, and the owner had his remedy by civil action for an injury to or loss or destruction of the same.¹² Our modern law recognizes that dogs have pecuniary value, and constitute property of their owner, as much so as horses and cattle or other domestic animals,¹³ and the Penal Code specifically provides that dogs are personal property, and their value is to be ascertained in the same manner as the value of other property.¹⁴ While it has been said that dogs are held in less regard and protection than more harmless and useful domestic animals, and are subject to a more strict control and regulation as to the mode of their keeping and use,¹⁵ it is equally true that aside from their pecuniary value their worth is generally recognized by writers and jurists.¹⁶

§ 49. Police Regulation as to Keeping.—While there is no power in municipal or other authorities to prohibit the ownership of dogs, it cannot be questioned but that property in dogs may be subjected to regulation by the state or municipal authorities in the exercise of its police power.¹⁷ While it has been contended that the right to regulate dogs does not exist in this state because the statute here impresses him with the full status of property, this contention is not maintainable, as it is well settled that domestic animals running in the streets are subject to regulation, notwithstanding ownership of such animals may be absolute. This regulation of property in dogs may take the form of a license.¹⁸ An ordinance providing that the owner of a dog shall on payment of the required tax attach to the collar worn by the dog, a seal or device as evidence of ownership and of such payment, and providing for the enforcement of a penalty for noncompliance, and also for the destruction of dogs not wearing the required collars, is an exercise of the police power, and not of the taxing power, where the fee exacted for such license is not intended for the purpose of revenue, but is designed to cover the expense of supervision and the proper enforcement of the ordinance.¹⁹ An ordinance is not unreasonable which requires the payment of the full license tax for a calendar year, regardless of the time when the dog is acquired, for the new owner would not be liable for the tax if it was paid by the previous owner, and conversely, if the previous owner had not done so, it is not unreasonable to require the subsequent owner to do so. Nor is an ordinance objectionable as taking property without due process of law which provides for the destruction of unlicensed dogs, without notifying their owners, when they are not redeemed after being impounded. But a marshal has, of course, no right to go upon the private premises of a citizen upon an official mission, without being armed with process, except where, upon such premises, he might himself witness the commission of a crime.²⁰

§ 50. Action for Injuries to Dogs.—While dogs were not recognized as property at common law for some purposes, it is well settled both by the early common law and by the modern law, that there is such a property in dogs that an action for damages will lie for their malicious destruction or injury.¹ Indeed, this is an appropriate remedy by which to test the lawfulness of the killing of a dog that was killing, wounding or worrying sheep.² The fact that a dog was upon the public streets without being licensed does not preclude a recovery for its value, for it is well settled that the violation of an ordinance wherein a penalty for noncompliance is prescribed cannot in addition thereto deprive a party of his civil rights to recover damage sustained by the negligence or wrong of another, when such violation bears no relation to the injury, and does not contribute in the remotest degree thereto.³ The pecuniary value of a dog may be the market value, or some special or peculiar value to its owner to be ascertained by reference to its usefulness or other qualities. Value is a question for the jury, after hearing evidence directed to these points.⁴

edge, he is an insurer of the acts of the animal to anyone injured without fault.⁷ There is an exception to this rule of scienter, in the case of sheep-killing dogs. With reference to them, the law provides that the owner, possessor, or harbinger of any dog or other animal that shall kill, worry, or wound any sheep, angora goat, or cashmere goat, or poultry, shall be liable to the owner of the same for the damages and costs of suit to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction; and that in such action it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to show that the owner, possessor, or harbinger of such dog or other animal, had knowledge of the fact that such dog or other animal would kill, wound or worry sheep, goats, or poultry.⁸

§ 52. Persons Liable.—It is clear that an owner of a vicious dog, who has control of him, is responsible in damages for injuries done by the dog if he knows the dog to be vicious. He is responsible, though the dog may live with other persons and is sometimes seen with them.⁹ But liability is not restricted to the true owner. If anyone undertakes to keep a vicious dog or other animal, whether he owns him or not, if he knows him to be vicious, he is bound to keep him in such a manner as not to endanger the lives or persons of others.¹⁰ Therefore, in an action for injuries it is not necessary to prove that the defendant is the owner. It is sufficient to prove that he harbors or keeps the dog which injured the plaintiff.¹¹ A person is a keeper of a dog within the rule, who is a head of a family, and who, having possession and control of a house or premises, suffers or permits a dog to be kept on the premises. This is true, though the title to the premises and the ownership of the dog may be in another.¹² On the other hand, a master who does not reside on and who has not the possession and control of the premises, and who does not authorize or require his servant to keep a dog is not the keeper of a dog owned by the servant. The master in such case is not liable for injuries done, unless the owner acted as servant in the matter of keeping and harboring the dog, for that relation in the particular act of which complaint is made, is the test in every case, as to whether the principle of respondeat superior applies. Thus, the owner of a bridge is not liable for damages for vicious acts of a dog belonging to the toll-keeper, either upon the ground that he is the keeper of the dog, or upon the further ground that the dog is an obstruction to safe travel for which the owner is responsible.¹³

§ 53. Pleading and Proof.—In an action to recover damages resulting from the biting by a dog, it is necessary to prove: (1) that the dog bit the plaintiff; (2) that the dog was vicious and accustomed to bite people; (3) that this fact was known to the defendant, and (4) that the dog was harbored or kept by the defendant.¹⁴ The plaintiff need not, in his complaint, negative contributory negligence, as the doctrine is well established in California that negligence on the part of the plaintiff is a matter of defense, to be proved affirmatively by the defendant, unless it can be inferred from circumstances proved by the plaintiff.¹⁵ As showing the vicious character of a dog, it is permissible to prove specific instances of the animal's viciousness,¹⁶ for, as it has been said, "every dog is entitled to his first bite before he becomes a biting dog."¹⁷ In proof of this character, it must appear that the animals figuring in the previous attacks and those which injured the plaintiff were the same.¹⁸ With reference to scienter, it is permissible to prove such previous instances of viciousness brought home to the owner or keeper of the dog,¹⁹ or it may be shown that he was personally notified that his dogs were accustomed to run out and bark at and attack people, or that such knowledge or notice was brought home to the defendant's wife or servant, who with his knowledge had custody or control of the dog.²⁰ In proving ownership of a dog, it may be proved that the defendant bought and paid for the dog, paid license taxes for keeping it, and procured a collar for the dog with his initials engraved thereon. But evidence tending to show that the dog which injured the plaintiff is a trick dog is inadmissible for any purpose, as such evidence does not tend to justify an attack by the dog.¹

§ 54. Killing Dogs in Defense of Sheep or Goats.—The statute provides that any person on finding any dog or other animal, not on the premises of its owner or possessor, worrying, wounding, or killing any sheep, angora or cashmere goats, may, at the time of finding such dog or dogs or other animals, kill the same, and the owner or owners thereof shall sustain no action for damages against any person so killing them.² The right to kill dogs under this provision is not limited to the owner of the sheep or goats, but extends to "any person" finding the dogs worrying, wounding, or killing the sheep or goats.³ It is not sufficient, however, that such person believes that the dog is doing the acts prohibited. It is necessary that the dog be actually doing the wrongful act of worrying, wounding, or killing the sheep or goats.⁴ The word "worrying" in the statute means running after, chasing, or barking at.⁵ The code provides that the dog must be doing the prohibited acts "at the time." This does not mean that to justify the killing, it is necessary to show that the dogs were killed in the very act of worrying the sheep. It would be sufficient if the dogs were found by the party worrying the sheep, and if he had immediately followed them up and killed them without allowing them to escape or get out of his sight. On the other hand, it is not sufficient justification that the killing was done to prevent the dogs from returning and injuring the sheep. The dogs must be caught in the act and then and there killed.⁶

§ 55. Killing Dogs in Defense of Other Animals or Property.—While the code provision excusing proof of scienter in actions for damages caused by the killing, worrying or wounding of sheep, goats, or poultry, specifically mentions poultry,⁷ the provision authorizing the killing of the dog by any person catching him in the act, does not mention poultry or any animals other than sheep and goats.⁸ It has been argued from this that the right to kill dogs in defense of other animals does not exist, but this contention is not maintainable. While the mere fact that a dog is trespassing does not of itself justify one in killing it,⁹ the natural right has always existed in one to defend his animals or property upon his own premises from the attack of trespassing dogs. And at the common law the justification for the killing was complete when it appeared that the dog was engaged in worrying and terrifying domestic animals in their own lawful inclosure, and where the necessity of the killing in order to protect the property was apparent. The right to destroy dogs, however, was limited at common law to the owner of the animals wounded or worried. Therefore, the code provision in question, in extending the remedy to any person who catches a dog in the act of worrying sheep or goats, whether he is the owner or not, provides an additional and cumulative remedy, and does not abridge the common-law right of an owner of poultry or other animals to kill trespassing dogs, engaged in worrying and killing them while in their own lawful inclosure where the necessity for the killing is apparent.¹⁰ The right to kill a dog is not affected by the relative value of the dog and the property being injured, especially where it is not shown that the party killing it knew of any especial value of the dog, for as said by the court, it can hardly be expected that the owner of poultry is bound to stand by and mentally calculate the value of the chickens destroyed, and postpone action until such value approximately equaled that of the dog.¹¹

ANNUITIES.

1. Definition and Creation.
2. Payment.
3. Principal Fund.

§ 1. Definition and Creation.—The Civil Code, in the chapter containing “general provisions relating to wills,” defines an annuity as “a bequest of certain specified sums periodically.”¹ Etymologically, annuity implies a yearly payment, yet grants providing for monthly or quarterly payments are none the less within the principles and rules pertaining to the subject, and, if made by will, are within this code definition.² Of course, the code, in defining an annuity as a bequest, has not intended to declare that annuities cannot be granted otherwise than by will. The general rule is that an annuity may be granted by deed as well as by will, may be given by way of marriage settlement or gift, or like any other chose in action may be the subject of a contract.³ A gift of an income from a certain fund is not an annuity if the amount to be paid is not certain.⁴ Any natural person may grant an annuity

1. Civ. Code, § 1357, subd. 3. In re MacKay's Estate, 107 Cal. 303, 40 Pac. 558, citing this provision of the code, and holding that a mere bequest of a specified sum in gross, the income of which (an uncertain quantity) is to be paid to another person, is not an annuity.

2. In Cohen v. Cohen, 141 Cal. 534, 75 Pac. 100, the contract was for a monthly payment. In England it has been held that where the annuity is directed to be paid monthly the first payment should be made at the expiration of a month after the testator's death. Houghton v. Franklin, 1 Sim. & St. 390, 57 Eng. Reprint, 156, 3 Eng. Rul. Cas. 151.

and life insurance companies often provide for payments of this kind either to the insured or to a beneficiary.⁵ By statute any charitable, religious, benevolent or educational society, corporation, institution or association which shall have been in operation for at least ten years, and which has obtained from the insurance commissioner a permit or certificate of authority to do so, may receive grants of property conditional upon its agreement to pay an annuity. Provision is made for a reserve fund to safeguard such annuities.⁶

§ 2. Payment.—Where annuities are given by will, according to express provision of the Civil Code, they “commence at the testator’s decease.”⁷ This, of course, applies where no express intention on the part of the testator to fix another time can be found, and a clause in a will providing for payment of annuities as soon as the trustees should have sufficient funds available for that purpose is to be construed as relating only to the time of payment, and not to the date when the annuities begin to run.⁸ On the other hand, where the will provides for an uncertain payment out of income from a trust fund, the payment does not commence until after final distribution of the fund to the trustees and the receipt by them of income from the fund.⁹ If the fund or property out of which annuities are payable fails, it is provided by the Civil Code that “resort may be had to the general assets, of Brown, 143 Cal. 450, 77 Pac. 160, where a will bequeathed a fund to be invested and out of the income to pay monthly twenty dollars during the beneficiary’s life, the court holding that this was but an uncertain payment out of income which might be more or less than twenty dollars a month, and was not an annuity, distinguishing In re MacKay, supra. as in case of a general legacy.”¹⁰ This provision, it has been observed, was doubtless adopted to cut off what had previously been a fruitful source of litigation in other states.¹¹ Under this section, and under a will providing that the first installment of an annuity should be paid by the trustees “as soon after my decease as sufficient funds for the purpose shall come into their possession,” and that the annuity should be a first charge upon and should be “made out of any money to come into the hands of said trustees on account of my estate,” such installment is payable out of the first moneys sufficient for the purpose to come into the hands of the trustees from any source.¹² Where periodical payments are required for the maintenance of a person, as in all other cases of annuities, the problem before the court is to gauge correctly the real intent of the donor.¹³ Where an annuity is made a lien upon land and the payments are not met as due, the usual remedy by foreclosure is available.¹⁴

10. Civ. Code, § 1357, subd. 3.

11. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 131, 51 Pac. 44. In other states the general trend of judicial opinion seems to be that the corpus of the estate will not be charged with an annuity unless the intention of the testator so to charge clearly appears. In England, on the other hand, the general rule appears to be that where an annuity is chargeable indefinitely on the income of a fund, and the income is insufficient to meet the annuity as it becomes due, the deficiency, as in California, is chargeable upon the corpus. 2 Ruling Case Law, 8.

12. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 131, 51 Pac. 44.

13. Cohen v. Cohen, 141 Cal. 534, 75 Pac. 100, construing a contract whereby a son agreed to pay a sum monthly to his father, and further to pay said sum to his sisters “during the period they remain single or unmarried, but the payment as aforesaid is only to be made to said Rose and Esther in case the said Rose and Esther are unmarried after the death” of the father. It was held that the parties did not intend that the marriage of one sister should cut off the other, and that payment should be made to a sister who was unmarried at the father’s death, so long as she continued unmarried, although the other sister, prior to the death of the father, became and ever since has been a married woman.

14. A wife who has foreclosed a lien for installments due upon a life annuity charged upon her husband’s land by an agreement of separation, and has purchased part of the land in satisfaction thereof, under a decree which allowed a subsequent mortgagee to sell the land

§ 3. Principal Fund.—According to the common law where an annuity is absolute and unqualified, the beneficiary, under a will giving property to trustees to pay out a certain sum in the purchase of an annuity, is entitled to receive the principal in lieu thereof. The reasoning on which this rule is established is that the legatee can sell the annuity as soon as it is bought, and the law will not require the performance of a nugatory act.¹⁵ But by the Civil Code

“A beneficiary of a trust for the receipt of the rents and profits of real property, or for the payment of an annuity out of such rents and profits, may be restrained from disposing of his interest in such trust, during his life or for a term of years, by the instrument creating the trust.”¹⁶

The investment of a fund, the interest on which is to pay an annuity, the overplus interest to be paid to residuary legatees when the annuity ceases, should be made with due regard to the interests of such legatees. Therefore the court, in order to provide for the required annuity, may direct executors to retain real property belonging to the estate and yielding an income slightly in excess of the annuity, rather than the purchase of United States bonds as suggested by the executors.¹⁷

subject to the wife's lien, but which did not provide for future installments, or for sales upon motion, may maintain a second action against such mortgagee, who purchases the land subject to her lien, to sell other portions thereof for further installments which have become due upon the annuity. Higgins v. San Diego Sav. Bank, 129 Cal. 184, 61 Pac. 943.

A. INTRODUCTORY.

§ 1. Scope of Article.—This article aims to cover the statutory and case law of California relating to the review by appeal and writ of error of judgments and orders rendered or made by superior courts in civil actions generally. It does not treat of appeals in criminal cases,¹ nor of appeals to superior courts, from judgments and orders of justices of the peace,² nor does it treat of other methods of reviewing proceedings such as certiorari³ and motions for new trial.⁴ Being a general article, it does not treat of the rules specially applicable to particular actions and proceedings. For the rules relating thereto, reference must be made to the title in which the particular action is considered.⁵ Costs on appeal are considered in a separate article,⁶ as is also the effect of the death of a party or transfer of interest pending an appeal and the method of substituting parties following such death or transfer,⁷ and the effect of an appearance upon appeal as a submission to jurisdiction.⁸

References to other articles in this work will disclose many illustrative applications of the principles here stated generally. It is suggested, therefore, that the practitioner consult, in connection with this treatment of the subject of Appeals, the particular article that is related to his case, for by doing so he will in many instances find much that will serve not only to illustrate, but possibly, to amplify, the present text.

§ 2. Survey of Law.—The law of appeals in California is declared in title XIII, of part II of the Code of Civil Procedure, embracing sections 936 to 980, and in the rules of the supreme court.⁹ These provisions are applicable not only to appeals in civil actions generally, but to appeals in probate proceedings as well, except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of title XI, part III of the code relating to probate proceedings.¹⁰ Appellate procedure has undergone many changes, and even now it is far from perfect. It is constantly subject to legislative changes, and it is therefore essential that the practitioner always consult the latest statutes. Because of these many changes cases decided under earlier statutes are often either valueless or valuable only as an aid in interpreting later statutes. These cases have been noted in this article so that a practitioner may see what relation they bear to the present law, and will not be misled by them; but because of their obsolete character, they have not been considered as fully as cases under the statutes in force.

Of course, it rarely happens that the constitutions and statutes relating to appeals are precisely alike in any two states. On the contrary, the procedure relating to the taking of appeals and the preparation of the record thereon as declared in the statutes of the different states is oftentimes widely divergent. For this reason cases from other states are oftentimes of no value as indicating the proper interpretation of California statutes, though, of course, such cases are persuasive as to certain general propositions of universal application, and occasionally the reasons given by courts of other states for particular holdings are worthy of consideration as indicating a proper interpretation.¹¹

§ 3. Nature and Form of Remedy Generally—Writ of error.—The method at common law by which a judgment in an action at law could be reviewed for error appearing in the record was by writ of error sued out of the court above to bring up the record for examination.¹² This was considered a new action to annul and set aside the judgment of the court below.¹³ It was a new and original suit, in which original process was issued and served to bring the adverse party into court. The relative character of the parties was changed, new pleadings were made up, and a final judgment upon it, though it might operate upon the original cause, was nevertheless a termination of the new suit.¹⁴ If the writ was seasonably sued out and bail put into the action, it was a supersedeas, so far as to prevent an execution from issuing on the judgment, pending the writ of error, but left it otherwise in full force between the parties, either as a ground of action, a bar, or an estoppel.¹⁵

Appeal.—The remedy by appeal was unknown to the common law. It was borrowed from the civil law and was adapted as a method of obtaining a review of the decisions of equity and admiralty courts. The appeal in these courts removed the whole case into the court above for trial de novo. Pending the hearing on appeal, there was no decree in the case, and there could be no estoppel by reason thereof. The tendency during the past century has been to assimilate proceedings in equity and law cases, and under the code practice the proceeding by which a judgment is reviewed in the appellate court is generally known as an appeal, although in effect it is more like a writ of error than an appeal.¹⁶ An appeal under the law of California is of the character last described. It is a direct attack upon the judgment or proceeding,¹⁷ but it has been held to be a continuation of the action merely and not a new suit.¹⁸

12. Sharon v. Hill, 26 Fed. 337, 11 Sawy. 290. See Widber v. Superior Court, 94 Cal. 430, 29 Pac. 870, holding a writ of error is not in the nature of a writ of review.

§ 4. Right of Appeal in General.—Since appeals had no existence at common law, it follows that any right to take an appeal must be found either in the constitution or statute.¹⁹ And as the constitution has not undertaken to define or secure the right of appeal to any person as against legislative control, the legislature has com-

of error is a new proceeding, and a party has full power to constitute an attorney to take an appeal other than the attorney of record in the court below). See, also, Davidson v. Dallas, 15 Cal. 75, where it is said that an appeal may be regarded as a new and distinct action, in which in theory issue is joined upon the assignment of errors made upon the record. Appeal where legislature provides no procedure. The statement just made is subject to a limitation. Where the constitution has conferred upon the supreme court or district court of appeal appellate jurisdiction over particular actions, the legislature is without authority to deprive such courts of the jurisdiction conferred. It is the duty of the court to exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon it, and it has been held that this duty is not relieved by the failure of the legislature to provide a means for its exercise. In the absence of any rules of practice enacted by the legislature, the court can establish an entire system of procedure.¹ As was well said in an early case:

“Independently of rules adopted by this [the supreme] court on the subject, an appeal, as a mere procedure, is defined by statute; it is essentially the creature of statute, and may be accorded or withheld, restrained or enlarged

Light-hall*, 1 Cal. 347; Warner v. Hall, 1 Cal. 90, concerning which Mr. Hayne, New Trial and Appeal, § 181, says that “at that time the power of the court to frame process proper for the exercise of its jurisdiction in cases where no process had been provided by the legislature does not seem to have been understood”; quoted in People v. Jordan, 65 Cal. 644, 4 Pac. 683.

or wholly abrogated by legislative enactment. It cannot be affirmed to have any existence, except as found in the expression of the legislative will. The constitution has not undertaken to define it, or to secure its benefits, to any person, as against the legislative control. While that instrument has defined the cases to which the appellate jurisdiction of this court extends, it has not attempted to provide, in any wise, for the mere instrumentalities through which that jurisdiction is to be exercised. It has left that subject wholly at large, and to be provided by the legislature through statutes enacted, or, in default of them, by this court, through rules adopted for that purpose. The jurisdiction of this court, as defined by the constitution, is in no sense dependent upon legislative provisions for its appropriate exercise. It exists, and is capable of effective assertion, independently of legislative aid as to the procedure through which it is to be exerted.'"²

But it does not follow that the supreme court would refuse to exercise a jurisdiction imposed upon it by the constitution, in default of a statute or of a rule formally adopted or promulgated. The power to establish rules providing an appropriate practice, where the legislature has not provided such, is not derived from the statute but exists inherently as an incident to the jurisdiction conferred, and in the absence of statute, rules of practice with respect to matters as to which the codes are silent may be adopted to go into force after such publication as the supreme court may deem proper, or without any publication. Therefore, a court having appellate jurisdiction may, in the absence of a statute or rule of court providing the machinery of an appeal, ratify the procedure by which a case is brought up.³

isted at common law, it is well settled that if an appeal be given by the code in a particular case, that remedy is exclusive and must be followed.⁴ Not only is the remedy by writ of error taken away by reasonable implication where an appeal is given,⁵ but the Code of Civil Procedure expressly provides that a judgment or order in a civil action, except when expressly made final by the code, may be reviewed as prescribed in that title, "and not otherwise."⁶ Again, the constitution empowers the appellate courts to issue such writs or process as may be necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction only. If this appellate jurisdiction can be exercised without a writ of error, then it cannot be necessary, and should not be issued.⁷ In reference to the cases where no appeal is given, the negative provision, "not otherwise," does not apply.⁸ And a court having appellate jurisdiction and power to issue all writs necessary to the exercise of its powers, as California appellate courts have, will furnish machinery to the end that the right of review be not lost.⁹ Such a court may issue a writ of error and thus bring a case up for review.¹⁰ A writ of error is a writ ex debito justitiae, wherever, by reason of error, a judgment of a court of record ought not to stand, and an appeal is not provided by statute.¹¹

§ 6. Effect of Other Remedy.—An appeal may be taken from any final decree, regardless of the power of the trial court to modify its judgment, as the defeated party is entitled to have an appellate court say whether a judgment is correct, and is not bound to wait for the court below to change its judgment.¹² Thus, a defendant may appeal from a default judgment immediately, notwithstanding he may have a limited period in which to seek relief from the judgment in the court below. He has an election which remedy to pursue,¹³ and he may probably avail himself of both.¹⁴

When a trial court declines to hear or in any way to act upon a proceeding pending before it, mandamus is the proper remedy by which to determine the duty of the court and compel it to act. This nonaction of the court cannot be reviewed on a general appeal of a case.¹⁵ On the other hand, when a court entertains a proceeding, and decides it according to the best of its ability, errors in the decision are reviewable on appeal, rather than by mandamus, as it is not the office of a writ of mandamus to review errors.¹⁶ While the mere fact that a court is about to act erroneously or irregularly in a matter of which it has jurisdiction will not warrant the issuance of a writ of prohibition,¹⁷ a party has a remedy by prohibition as well as by appeal, where there is an excess of jurisdiction; though if the remedy by appeal is adequate, a writ of prohibition will not be issued.¹⁸

§ 7. Successive Appeals.—Since a valid appeal from a judgment or order vests the appellate jurisdiction and leaves nothing pending in the trial court from which an appeal can be taken, it follows that a party against whom a judgment is rendered who has taken and perfected a valid appeal therefrom has no right thereafter to take a second appeal from that judgment.¹⁹ So, also, inasmuch as the failure of the sureties on the undertaking on appeal to justify does not render the appeal ineffectual, a second appeal cannot be taken from a judgment or order merely because of such failure.²⁰

Right to take appeal after dismissal of prior appeal.—The right to take an appeal from a judgment or order after a dismissal of a prior appeal therefrom, depends upon whether the dismissal operates as a bar to a further appeal. The Code of Civil Procedure provides that the dismissal of an appeal is in effect an affirmance of the judgment or order appealed from, unless the dismissal is expressly made without prejudice to another appeal.¹ The bar of this section applies where the dismissal is for want of prosecution, unless it be expressly made “without prejudice,"² or where it is upon the merits,³ or when the dismissal is had by consent.⁴ But this code section does not apply so as to preclude another appeal in the same case where the dismissal was made on the ground that the appeal was prematurely taken, because in such case there was at the time nothing from which to take an appeal.⁵

It is not clear whether this section would operate as a bar where the dismissal is because of some defect in the proceedings to take an appeal, such as a failure to file the required undertaking and the like. The dismissal in such case should be "without prejudice."⁶ But it has not been decided what would be the effect if the order did not so specify, though it is probable that the dismissal would operate as a bar.⁷ Where an appeal is dismissed without prejudice for want of prosecution, the right to take another appeal is not barred by a subsequent inadvertent order dismissing the appeal absolutely, as such order is without effect, there being in such case no appeal pending upon which it can operate.⁸

§ 8. Double Appeals.—A party cannot be permitted to prosecute two separate and distinct remedies in the appellate court for the review of the same question at the same time. Where an appeal from a judgment is pending, the appellate court will not entertain an appeal from a decree in a proceeding in the nature of a bill of review which presents the same questions as are presented on the former appeal.⁹ But neither this rule nor the rule against successive appeals forbids the taking of several appeals from separate orders or judgments in an action.¹⁰ Accordingly, under the former practice, when orders denying new trials were directly appealable, it was common to appeal at the same time both from the final judgment and an order denying a new trial. The right to appeal from a judgment and from an order denying a new trial were distinct and separate rights. The party might waive either and rely on the other. He might take an appeal from the judgment without waiting the determination of the motion for new trial, or he might prosecute both appeals together.¹¹ As both proceedings were recognized as being “entirely independent of each other, it followed that a disposition of one appeal did not affect the rights of the parties under the other.¹² An affirmance of the judgment upon an appeal therefrom did not oust the court of authority in effect to reverse it on appeal from an order denying a new trial.¹³ The dismissal of an appeal from a judgment was not a bar to an appeal from a subsequent order denying a new trial.¹⁴ And conversely, the appeal from the judgment might go on after the appeal from the order had been dismissed.¹⁵ As to those errors which may be reviewed on either appeal, the remedy was deemed concurrent, and the party was allowed to pursue either appeal and abandon the other.¹⁶

§ 9. Law Governing Appeals.—It is a general rule that the right of appeal is governed by the law in force at the time of the rendition of the judgment or order complained of.¹⁷ The inconvenience and confusion of holding otherwise is a good illustration of the wisdom of the rules of construction which require statutes to be so construed as not to give them a retroactive operation, unless such an intention is clearly apparent.¹⁸ If no right of appeal exists at the time of the rendition of a judgment or order, a subsequent enabling act does not authorize an appeal therefrom, or have the effect of saving a prior appeal taken without authority.¹⁹ And even where a statute authorizing an appeal goes into effect intermediate the rendition and entry of an order or judgment, it has been held that there is no right to appeal from such judgment or order. The time in which to appeal begins to run from the entry of judgment, but the statutes fixing the time in which to appeal do not confer the right to appeal. The judgment or order is complete and perfect and has full force and effect before it is entered. The right of appeal is given from the judgment and may be exercised when the judgment or order is entered.²⁰ On the other hand, if a statute depriving a particular judgment or order of its appealable character goes into effect pending an action or proceeding which culminates in such judgment or order, no right to appeal from such judgment subsequently rendered and entered exists.¹ But the courts have declined to dismiss appeals taken when the law authorized such appeal, where to do so would be to give the change in the statute a retroactive effect not intended by the legislature.² In short, it is the condition of the law at the time of the making the order or rendering the judgment that controls.³

Time to appeal.—Statutes shortening the time for appeal will not be given a retrospective effect, but will be applied to judgments and orders thereafter entered, unless a contrary intention is clearly apparent, for it is presumed that no statute is intended to have such effect unless the contrary clearly appears.⁴ In other words, the time within which to take an appeal depends upon the statute in force at the time of the entry of the judgment or order.⁵ Upon the entry of judgment, the right of appeal becomes vested for the full time allowed by the statute then existent, and this right is not curtailed by subsequent statutes shortening the time.⁶ As has already been stated, a different rule obtains where the right to appeal is involved.⁷

Constitutional provisions relating to remedy.—The rule is that statutes affecting the remedy only are applicable to actions pending at the time of their enactment.⁸ In harmony with this rule, it was held that the amendment to section 4½ of article VI of the constitution, by which the appellate courts were forbidden to reverse unless of the opinion that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice, was applicable to pending appeals, although they may have been submitted prior to the adoption of this amendment.⁹

§ 10. Construction of Statutes.—The right of appeal is remedial and statutory provisions in aid thereof should be liberally interpreted.¹⁰ They should not be unduly hampered with constructive restrictions which will cast doubt on the jurisdiction of the appellate court.¹¹ In determining whether a right of appeal is conferred, it is the duty of a court to construe the statute so as to uphold the right, if it can be done without violating established rules of statutory construction, for it is not lightly to be presumed that the legislature intended to deny a right of appeal.¹² But if the legislature has clearly expressed its intention that there shall be no appeal in a particular case, the courts have no right to defeat this intention by torturing or disregarding the statutory language, but must give effect to the law.¹³ This intention must be clearly expressed, however. And since the right of appeal exists and is available generally in special proceedings, the fact that the legislature does not in terms deprive the parties of such right in a particular special proceeding, or use some apt language in the act expressing such intention, such as making the judgment final or conclusive, clearly indicates that the right of appeal is not intended to be disturbed.¹⁴

B. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

§ 11. In General.—In order to review a case on appeal, it is, of course, essential that the appellate court have jurisdiction of the subject matter of the appeal and of the parties thereto.¹⁵ The jurisdiction of the appellate courts is defined by the constitution, and it is well settled that the legislature can neither add to nor subtract therefrom.¹⁶ Parties cannot, by consent or stipulation, authorize the review of causes not within the jurisdiction of the appellate court.¹⁷ But the legislature has plenary powers over the subject of taking an appeal, and a noncompliance with the statute prescribing the steps to be taken goes to the jurisdiction of the appellate court,¹⁸ and requires a dismissal of the appeal.¹⁹ The particular subjects over which the appellate courts have jurisdiction are discussed elsewhere.²⁰

§ 12. Existence of Actual Controversy.—It is well established that a court of review can only entertain appeals involving a real or substantial controversy between the parties to the suit, or which involve the determination of adversary rights.¹ An appellate court will not consider an appeal where the questions have become purely abstract and moot, and where no judgment which could be rendered therein would afford the parties any relief. The demands of actual, practical litigation are too pressing to permit the examination or discussion of purely academic questions.² A court is not empowered to decide moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare, for the government of future cases, principles or rules of law which cannot affect the result as to the thing in issue in the case before it.³ And the parties cannot by stipulation require the court to consider such questions.⁴ Nor will the court entertain an appeal presenting only moot or abstract questions even where the liability for costs on appeal is involved,⁵ but will dismiss the appeal.⁶ Distinguishable from the last proposition is the case in which a judgment for costs is rendered. An appeal from a judgment in an action for abatement of a nuisance awarding costs and counsel fees will not be dismissed because of the abatement of the nuisance in fact. Such abatement does not satisfy the judgment for costs, and it is well settled that a party may appeal from that part of the judgment awarding costs.⁷

§ 13. When Questions Become Moot.—The questions involved in an appeal may become moot and abstract, by reason of some act of the parties, an act of the court, by lapse of time,⁸ by act of legislature, by act of God, and perhaps in other ways.⁹ Illustrative of the first class mentioned, an appeal from an order refusing to grant or dissolving an injunction against the performance of a single act will be dismissed if the act is done pending the appeal.¹⁰ For instance, an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction against the issuance of municipal improvement bonds presents only a moot question if the bonds are issued pending the appeal. In this connection the appellate court will not assume that a condition once shown to exist will continue, as against an allegation in the complaint that the defendant will issue the bonds unless restrained and against the presumption that the defendant, who is an officer of the municipality, has performed the duty imposed upon him. The appellate court will assume the allegation to be true and dismiss the appeal.¹¹ So, also, where the parties have settled between themselves all the matters in dispute in an action, the appeal from a judgment therein that the defendant recover costs of suit amounting to the sum of — dollars, and that therefore the appeal would not be retained on this ground. See infra, § 25, as to appeal from part of judgment.

9. Weaver v. Reddy, 135 Cal. 430, 67 Pac. 683 (where a superintendent of an almshouse removed by the state board of health brought suit against them for reinstatement, and no longer presents a contest involving the determination of adversary rights, and will not be retained.¹² And a like result follows where pending an appeal involving the title to land all the parties thereto transfer their respective disputed interests in the property involved to a third person in whom the full legal title is merged.¹³

With reference to the second class, the decision of one appeal may make the questions in another appeal in the same cause moot and render a decision thereof ineffectual.¹⁴ Thus, in an action for an injunction, the affirmance of a judgment for the defendant renders moot the questions presented by an appeal from an order granting¹⁵ or dissolving¹⁶ a temporary injunction. And where a party appeals from a decree of distribution and from an order denying a new trial in a proceeding to determine heirship, the questions on the latter appeal become moot after a determination on the former that the appellant had no interest in the matter of distribution.¹⁷

of an appeal from the order granting the injunction, the appeal presents merely an abstract question which does not arise upon any existing facts or rights, and must therefore be dismissed.¹⁸ So, also, an appeal from a judgment of mandate requiring the issuance of a license will be dismissed when the license has expired before the appeal is heard.¹⁹

When in an appeal in a certiorari case to annul an order revoking a personal license the appellant dies, it may well be said that the questions were rendered moot by an act of God.²⁰ The act of the legislature in repealing a statute renders moot the questions involved in an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction restraining a party from proceeding thereunder.¹

§ 14. Effect of Want of Jurisdiction in Trial Court.— Jurisdiction of the appellate courts over judgments of superior courts includes those in which that court improperly assumed jurisdiction as well as those in which it was properly entertained.² And when the superior court has assumed jurisdiction and rendered an affirmative judgment, the appeal will not be dismissed for want of jurisdiction in the superior court.³ The jurisdiction of appellate courts is revisory of the action of the superior court, and is to be exercised by affirming, correcting, modifying or setting aside its judgments; and if the appeal were dismissed, the judgment would remain as originally pronounced.⁴ Upon this principle and because the remedy by appeal was adequate, the appellate courts have a number of times refused to issue a writ of prohibition, notwithstanding a question of jurisdiction was involved.⁵ If the rule were otherwise, whenever a defendant chooses to raise a point of jurisdiction either of the person or of the subject matter, he could by prohibition stop the ordinary progress of actions until the jurisdictional question is passed upon by an appellate court, and thus, the appellate court would in numerous cases be converted into a nisi prius court.⁶

Application of rule.—The rule just enunciated has been applied in a variety of cases. Thus, it has been held that an appellate court will entertain an appeal from a judgment in a proceeding to determine heirship notwithstanding the proceeding was instituted before the expiration of one year from the issuance of letters of administration, and therefore without the jurisdiction of the superior court.⁷ It will also entertain an appeal from a judgment in a taxpayer's action where the trial court, notwithstanding a finding that the plaintiff was neither a citizen nor taxpayer, renders an affirmative judgment upon the merits.⁸ Again, the failure to take proper steps to procure a new trial may deprive the trial court of jurisdiction of the proceedings, but it does not defeat the jurisdiction of the appellate court, and necessitate a dismissal of an appeal from an order on such motion on the ground that the court has not acquired jurisdiction to hear it.⁹ So, also, whether or not a failure of a foreign corporation to comply with the statutory prerequisites to the bringing of an action goes to the jurisdiction of the trial court, an appeal lies from any adverse judgment and precludes the issuance of a writ of prohibition, if the remedy by appeal is adequate.¹⁰ Where, notwithstanding the fact that an action brought in the justice's court involves more than three hundred dollars and is therefore beyond his jurisdiction, the superior court entertains the case on appeal and renders judgment in an amount exceeding three hundred dollars, the supreme court has jurisdiction of an appeal from that judgment, though it be void.¹¹ On the other hand, a contention that a simple action at law is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the justice's court because the demand does not amount to three hundred dollars, when well founded, defeats an appeal to the supreme court or a district court of appeal, as neither court has jurisdiction where the amount involved is less than that amount.¹²

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

§ 15. Introductory.—It is elementary that the decisions which are appealable under the code are designated as judgments and orders. If no judgment or order has been rendered or made, there is nothing from which to appeal.¹³ A judgment is defined by the code to be the final determination of the right of the parties in an action or proceeding.¹⁴ And an order is defined to be a direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment.¹⁵ It is clear that these provisions do not embrace the findings of fact and conclusions of law,¹⁶ or a written request by a plaintiff to dismiss his action,¹⁷ and that therefore an appeal will not lie from them. So, also, an appeal taken from an order for judgment rather than from the judgment itself is premature.¹⁸ An order to show cause is a form of notice, and it is questionable whether such an order is appealable though made after judgment.¹⁹ A refusal of a court to act upon an application for an order because, for instance, it deems itself to be without jurisdiction to do so, is not an "order" and cannot be the subject of an appeal. The remedy of the party in such case is by mandamus to compel the court to take action in the matter.²⁰ An alleged

See Morehouse v. Pacific Hdw. & Steel Co., 177 Fed. 337, 100 C. C. A. 647, citing the McAuliffe case and stating the order to show cause is in the nature of process, and, in jurisdictions where interlocutory orders are made appealable if they affect substantial rights, it is held that an order to show cause is not of that nature.

order which merely declares that an injunction is no longer in force and which does not by its terms purport to dissolve an injunction previously granted or have any effect upon the injunction is not a "direction" of a court or judge and is not therefore appealable.¹

The judgments and orders which are appealable in California are enumerated in section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.² They are divided in this part of the article into three distinct classes: 1. Final judgments of superior courts;³ 2. Certain enumerated orders;⁴ and 3. Certain specified judgments or orders made in probate proceedings.⁵ The first and second classes embrace judgments and orders other than those made in probate proceedings, and the third class embraces only such as are made in such proceedings.⁶ Of course, the question as to the appealability of any particular judgment or order is ultimately to be determined by the court to which an appeal therefrom is taken.⁷ As affecting the determination of this question it is well settled that the rule that an appellate court will not disturb the action of a trial court in the exercise of its discretionary powers has no application.⁸ If a particular order is not appealable, an attempt to take an appeal therefrom does not confer upon an appellate court power or authority to review it;⁹ the appellate court is without jurisdiction of the appeal and must dismiss it.¹⁰

§ 16. Final Judgments “In Actions or Special Proceedings.”—Subdivision 1 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal may be taken

“From a final judgment entered in an action or special proceeding, commenced in a superior court or brought into a superior court from another court.”

In order that a judgment may be appealable by virtue of this subdivision, it must be (1) a final judgment, (2) a judgment entered in an action or special proceeding, and (3) the action or special proceeding must have been commenced in the superior court or brought into a superior court from another court. These requisites will be separately considered. With reference to the second requisite, which will be treated first, for convenience, it is clear that a judgment to be appealable must be one rendered in an action or special proceeding. An action, as defined by the code, is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, or the redress or prevention of a wrong.¹¹ Every other remedy is a special proceeding.¹² No distinction is made by the code between the right to appeal in cases which were once denominated cases at law and those once called cases in equity.¹³ But inasmuch as the code makes special provision for appeals in probate proceedings, the terms “action” and “special proceedings” as used in subdivision 1 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not include probate proceedings.¹⁴

Special proceedings.—The provision of the Code of Civil Procedure under discussion confers the right of appeal

in special proceedings generally, and therefore, in the absence of any provision in a statute providing for a particular special proceeding and denying the right of appeal from the judgment therein, an appeal may be taken by virtue of this general provision.¹⁵ A proceeding to condemn land for public purposes is a special proceeding, as the court acts judicially therein, a petition is filed setting up the grounds upon which the right to acquire the land is claimed, and the parties interested are summoned to appear and answer; consequently a final judgment therein is appealable as a final judgment in a special proceeding.¹⁶ A judgment upon an award is a judgment upon a proceeding within the meaning of the statute.¹⁷ And where two suits are brought in different states against a common defendant and the plaintiff in one action intervenes in the other and procures an order directing the delivery of books of the defendant to him for use in his own action, the intervention is in effect a special proceeding being spent by the order made and the order is appealable as a final judgment in a special proceeding.¹⁸

The code classifies proceedings to obtain the issuance of the writs of mandamus, prohibition and review or certiorari, as special proceedings, consequently appeals may be taken from the judgments therein as final judgments in special proceedings.¹⁹ So, also, because the following are special proceedings, appeals may be taken from the final judgments therein: a proceeding to try the validity of a corporate election;²⁰ a proceeding to oust an officer because of malfeasance in office;¹ a proceeding brought under a statute authorizing the removal of boards of supervisors for neglecting to fix water rates;² and a proceeding instituted pursuant to section 10 of the Bank Commissioners' Act to force a bank into involuntary liquidation.³ But the presentation by a reporter of his claim for his fees for reporting and for transcripts in criminal cases pursuant to section 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure is neither an action nor special proceeding, and no appeal lies from a judgment thereon.⁴

§ 17. In Actions Commenced in or Brought into Superior Court.—With reference to the third requisite, it is essential that the judgment to be appealed from be one rendered in an action or special proceeding “commenced in a superior court, or brought into a superior court from another court.”⁵ The mere fact that a case is brought into the superior court by an appeal from a judgment of a justice's court cannot furnish a test of the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court or district court of appeal. If the case is one in which the latter courts have appellate jurisdiction under the constitution, the practice of taking an appeal first to the superior court and next to the supreme court or district court of appeal is probably correct under this provision of the code. The question, however, is not as to the correct practice in such case, but one as to the jurisdiction of the appellate courts under the constitution.⁶ Under this instrument, neither the supreme court nor the district court of appeal has jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment for money rendered by the superior court on appeal from the justice's court, when the demand is less than three hundred dollars, and the title or possession of real estate and the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine is not involved.⁷ Therefore, it follows that the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court and of the district court of appeal over the judgments of the superior court is limited to cases in which that court is entitled to exercise original jurisdiction, and does not extend to a review of its action in which it exercises only an appellate jurisdiction. Judgments of a superior court in the latter case cannot be reviewed upon an appeal,⁸ or upon writ of error.⁹ And the fact that a superior court on appeal permits an amendment which has the effect of converting the action into one over which the justice's court had no jurisdiction, notwithstanding its lack of power to do so, does not make its judgment appealable.¹⁰

The supreme court is without jurisdiction even where the action is brought to foreclose a lien upon personal property, and is therefore in equity, for the constitution specifically excepts from the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court over equity cases those cases which arose in the justices' courts.¹¹ When, however, the title or possession of real property or the legality of a tax, impost, assessment or tax is involved, and the case is certified to the superior court, such court exercises original, not appellate jurisdiction, and its judgment in the action is appealable.¹² The fact that such an action is brought into the superior court by appeal instead of the method prescribed constitutes merely an irregularity in the manner in which jurisdiction is obtained. The superior court in such case exercises original jurisdiction, and if it, without objection to this irregularity, tries the action and renders judgment, the judgment rendered is cognizable by the appellate courts as if it had been begun in the superior court.¹³

§ 18. What Constitutes Finality in General.—A judgment may be a final adjudication in different senses. In one sense, it may be final with reference to the property or rights affected, so that no further proceedings in a cause by appeal or otherwise may be taken.¹⁴ In another sense, a judgment may be final as to the court which renders it without being final as to the subject matter, and, as such, be the subject of an appeal, without being final with reference to the property or rights affected;¹⁵ in other words, the judgment is a final determination of the particular suit, without being a final determination of the rights of the parties.¹⁶ A final judgment is distinguished from an interlocutory order or judgment. It is in the latter sense that the term “final judgment” is used in the provision of the code under discussion. It is sometimes very difficult to determine whether a particular judgment or decree is a “final judgment” within the meaning of that term as used in the statutes concerning appeals. It is clear that the question is not to be determined by technical definitions and verbal criticisms on the terms and phrases in which judgments have been or may be expressed, but is to be determined by the substance and effect of the adjudication in question.¹⁷ It matters not in what form the determination of a suit is put, so that it embodies the final action of the court.¹⁸ An adjudication which is in form an order may be deemed a final judgment and vice versa.¹⁹

However, a general guide on the question of finality must be found and the courts in a number of cases have given definitions of final judgments. Many of these definitions, while true so far as the particular case in which they are given, are not sufficiently comprehensive when applied to facts not before the court. For example, in the first case in the reports in which the question arose, the court said in substance: An order is a decision made during the progress of a cause, either prior to or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some question collateral to the main issue presented by the pleadings and necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment. But a judgment is the determination of the court upon the issues presented by the pleadings, which ascertains and fixes absolutely and finally the rights of the parties in the particular suit in relation to the subject matter in litigation, and puts an end to the suit.²⁰ So, also, in later cases, it has been held that a judgment is final only when it terminates the litigation between the parties on the merits of the case and leaves nothing to be done but to enforce by execution what has been determined.¹ And it has several times been said that the term

"final judgment" evidently means the ultimate or last judgment which puts an end to a suit or proceeding.²

This is the ordinary definition of the term, and while it is true as far as it goes, the definition is too restricted, as the term has a somewhat more comprehensive meaning. It is well established that a judgment is final which determines a particular case though it does not finally decide upon the rights which are litigated.³ Thus, for instance, a judgment of nonsuit, other than a voluntary nonsuit, is a final judgment, even though no costs be awarded against the plaintiff.⁴ So, also, an order of the superior court dismissing an appeal from a justice's court is a final judgment within the rule.⁵

The general test applicable in determining whether a judgment is final or merely interlocutory therefore, is that if anything further in the nature of judicial action on the part of the court is essential to a final determination of the rights of the parties, the judgment is interlocutory only. But if no further questions can come before the court after a judgment has been entered, except such as are necessary to be determined in carrying the judgment into effect, the judgment is final.⁶

§ 19. Finality as to Issues and Parties.—In accordance with the tests already given, a judgment is not ordinarily final which does not dispose of all the necessary issues of law and fact and completely dispose of the case so far as the court has power to do so.⁷ Our system of procedure contemplates that there shall be but one final judgment in a case,⁸ and in the absence of a clear showing, it is not to be presumed that a trial court would attempt to dispose of a case piecemeal by successive final judgments, each covering a part of the matters in controversy.⁹ It is a general rule that to be final a judgment must dispose of the rights of all the parties to the action in relation to the matter in controversy. In general, there must be an express adjudication of the subject matter of the controversy as to all the parties plaintiff and all of the parties defendant, otherwise there is no final disposi-tribution of the corporate property, is a final judgment, as it has the effect of taking the property sold from the possession and control of the court and the parties, and puts the money distributed beyond the power of the court and out of the litigation, so that it could not be regained or affected by subsequent proceedings); *Bronzan v. tion of the matters litigated between the parties.¹⁰ Accordingly, where the asserted liability of the defendants in an action is joint and several, as in an action against an officer and his sureties, a judgment upon a demurrer dismissing an action in favor of some of the defendants and leaving it pending as to others is not a final appealable judgment.¹¹ This rule, however, is not absolutely true in the broad sense in which it has just been stated. For example, in an action to set aside an administrator's deed brought against the administrator and subsequent purchasers of his grantee and mortgagees claiming thereunder, a judgment dismissing the action as to the grantee was held to be a final judgment, from which the plaintiff may appeal. The true rule is that any set of parties whose interests are identical must have the controversy as to them settled before any final judgment may be entered. No given set of parties can try a case piecemeal. But separate parties, if the court in its discretion so directs, may litigate their controversies separately and proceed to final judgment without waiting for judgments as to other parties.¹²

The fact that a particular judgment may not be binding on one of the parties to the action does not prevent it from being a final judgment within the code provision relating to appeals. Thus, a judgment in favor of a railroad in condemnation proceedings finally determining the rights of the parties therein is a final judgment, notwithstanding the fact that the award and judgment may not be binding on the company so as to compel it to take the land and pay the award.¹³

§ 20. Where Further Orders are Necessary.—It is a settled rule that if a superior court makes a decree fixing the liability and rights of the parties and refers the case to a master or subordinate tribunal for a judicial purpose, such, for instance, as a statement of account upon which a further decree is to be entered, the decree is not final.¹⁴

But a judgment which adjudicates the whole matter in litigation is none the less final because some future orders of court may be necessary to carry it into effect,¹⁵ or because some independent branch of the case is reserved for future decision,¹⁶ or because an account is directed to ascertain what sum is due from one to the other as a result of the decision made.¹⁷ Thus, a decree for the dissolution of a partnership, a sale of all its property and effects, the payment of certain debts, and directing the payment of any balance remaining to the partners in a certain proportion fixed by the decree, is a final judgment, although the balance due the receiver appointed to sell the property and the exact amount of the surplus for division is not ascertained. The decree determines all the essential matters in controversy and nothing remains to be done but to enforce by execution what had been determined by the judgment.¹⁸ So, also, a judgment dissolving a partnership directing a sale of the firm property and providing for a distribution of the proceeds is a final judgment, although the compensation of the receiver and the amount to be paid creditors are reserved for future determination. The rights of the parties are fully established by the judgment, and nothing remains to be done except the mere ascertainment of the amounts due to others than the parties on account of fees for services in the action, and debts owing by the parties and partners, and to see that the decree already made is executed. Upon the subsequent ascertainment of the amounts due to others by force of the judgment, the parties will be entitled to the portions of the remainder adjudged to belong to them.¹⁹ On the other hand, however, a decree is not final which settles only the original terms of a partnership, and directs the taking of an account, but does not determine whether any specific sum or proportion is due the partners, or determine whether any or what part of the property should be sold.²⁰ So, also, where a partner converts the profits of a business, a decree dissolving the partnership and directing an account of the amount converted, a sale of the partnership property and division of the proceeds of the sale and the amount converted is not a final decree, because the amount of the profits of the business converted and the amount thereof the other partners are entitled to has not been ascertained. If this amount were ascertained, the case would be within the rule of the cases already cited in this section.¹

A conditional order is not final but is interlocutory in character and contemplates a further order granting or denying the motion absolutely upon the performance or nonperformance of the condition imposed. An order granting a motion to set aside a default upon the payment within a designated time of a specified sum as costs is an order of this character and is not appealable.²

§ 21. Final Determination of Collateral Matters.—A final judgment, however, is not necessarily the last one in an action. The code provides for an appeal from “a final judgment,” not from “the” final judgment in an action.³ While a decree finally determining all the issues presented by the pleadings is undoubtedly a final decision, the term “final judgment” is not limited to such decisions. It applies also to a final determination of a collateral matter distinct from the general subject of litigation, affecting only the parties to the particular controversy and finally settling the same.⁴ As said in a comparatively recent case, a judgment that is conclusive of any question in a case is final as to that question.⁵ This rule is not in violation of the doctrine that a judgment to be final must dispose of the rights of all the parties to the action in relation to the matter in controversy, as the order finally

disposes of the collateral proceeding, the matter in controversy.⁶

The rule deducible from the authorities is that those orders in collateral proceedings are final and appealable which require the payment of money by the party complaining,⁷ or which require the doing of an act by or against him.⁸ But those orders are not final which in nature are such as to be subject, before enforcement or execution, to the further action of the court either by decree or subsequent order,⁹ or which do not determine the rights of the parties in the property involved or direct the performance of any act by or against a party.¹⁰

Within these rules, the following orders are final and appealable: An order settling the accounts of a receiver and directing the payment of his compensation by one of the parties;¹¹ an order requiring a person, not a party to a suit, to pay money to a receiver of an insolvent bank, notwithstanding the fact that a part of such money was claimed by third parties;¹² an order in a suit to quiet title directing a party holding a first mortgage on the property to execute to the plaintiff, on payment of the principal and interest, an assignment of the note and mortgage;¹³

an order requiring a sheriff to sell property without indemnity bond;¹⁴ and an order in a divorce suit directing the payment of temporary alimony and counsel fees. On the other hand, any order that a court may make upon the application of a receiver for directions in aiding in preserving the property involved in a suit, whether for the expenditure of money or for the performance of duty, may be reviewed, upon proper exceptions taken, after final judgment has been rendered, or, in exceptional cases, after the settlement of his final account. To permit a direct appeal from such orders would greatly hamper the court in its efforts to preserve the property, and not prejudice the rights of all the parties interested. Accordingly, a direct appeal will not lie from an order directing the action of a receiver in the disbursement of a portion of the funds in his hands,¹⁵ or from an order which is merely a partial settlement of a receiver's account.¹⁷ An order directing a receiver to pay counsel fees out of the funds in his hands,¹⁸ or to apply funds in his hands toward the payment of his compensation¹⁹ stands

§ 22. Effect of Grant of New Trial or Vacation of Judgment.—The effect of an order granting a new trial, when it becomes final, is to set aside the findings or verdict in an action, and to cause the judgment resting thereon to fall. Consequently, an appeal cannot be taken from the judgment after such order has become final, either by the expiration of the time in which to appeal,²⁰ or by a dismissal of a direct appeal therefrom,¹ or by an affirmance of the order.² While the ultimate effect of the order, if unappealed from, or if sustained upon appeal where one is taken, is to vacate the judgment and require another trial of the action, such result does not follow until the finality of the order is determined in one or the other modes suggested. Pending an appeal therefrom, it is suspended and set at large, and the rights of the parties stand unaffected thereby, excepting in so far as their prosecution may be stayed by virtue of the provisions of the statute. The judgment then remains subsisting, and, for the purpose of an appeal, stands as if no order for a new trial had ever been made.³ That the effect of the order is not to destroy the judgment ipso facto upon its entry is made clear by the effect of a reversal of the order on appeal. The law does not provide for the entry of a new judgment in the court below on the going down of the remittitur as would be required had the judgment wholly ceased to exist, but the judgment as originally entered in that court stands as the judgment in the action, and has effect from the date of such original entry.⁴ A contrary rule would preclude the party against whom the judgment was recovered from attacking the judgment, should his order granting a new trial be reversed, as the statute provides for no extension of time to appeal from the judgment in such case. In other words, the judgment exists for the purposes of procedure where otherwise rights would be lost by mere lapse of time, without any power of the party interested to prevent it. In days of old, it would perhaps have been said to be a fiction indulged for the sake of the remedy.⁵ A defendant, after having had the judgment set aside on his own motion, cannot treat it as valid for the purpose of having it reviewed upon an appeal.⁶

§ 23. Interlocutory Orders Generally.—As affecting the right to appeal therefrom, orders are divided into two classes, interlocutory orders and special orders made after final judgment.⁷ Interlocutory orders are not appealable unless specifically enumerated in the provision of the code authorizing the taking of appeals; in other words, in subdivision 2 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁸ It is immaterial in this connection whether the action is in equity or not, for interlocutory orders in equity cases as in actions at law may be the subject of direct appeal only when the statute so provides.⁹ Such, also, was the rule under the constitution of 1849 and the Practice Act.¹⁰

With reference to the particular orders which are the subject of a direct appeal, the code authorizes an appeal from the following: From an order granting a new trial in an action or proceeding tried by a jury where such trial by jury is a matter of right,¹¹ or granting or dissolving an injunction or refusing to grant or dissolve an injunction,¹² or appointing a receiver,¹³ or dissolving or refusing to dissolve an attachment,¹⁴ or changing or refusing to change a place of trial,¹⁵ from any special order made after final judgment,¹⁶ from any interlocutory judgment, order or decree made or entered in actions to redeem real or personal property from a mortgage thereof or lien thereon, determining such right to redeem and directing an accounting,¹⁷ and from any such interlocutory judgment in actions for partition as determines the rights and interests of the respective parties and directs partition to be made,¹⁸ and from interlocutory decrees of divorce.¹⁹ Any order not within the terms of this provision is reviewable upon a direct appeal therefrom if it is embraced by the term "final judgment";²⁰ or, if not such final judgment, upon an appeal from such final judgment as may thereafter be entered in the action.¹

§ 24. Special Orders Made After Final Judgment.—The code authorizes the taking of an appeal "from any special order made after final judgment."² The final judgment referred to is the final judgment mentioned in subdivision 1, of section 963, viz.: "A final judgment entered in an action, or special proceeding, commenced in a superior court, or brought into a superior court from another court."³ The term "final judgment" does not embrace an order for judgment,⁴ or judgments or orders in probate proceedings;⁵ and orders made thereafter are not appealable as special orders made after final judgment. Since the reversal of a judgment has the effect of vacating it, it follows that orders made after the reversal and remand of the cause for new trial are not appealable as orders made after final judgment.⁶ Where findings of fact are not waived, it has been held that there can be no entry of judgment until they are made and filed, and therefore an order after issue joined denying relief to a party is not a final judgment, and orders thereafter made are not appealable as special orders after final judgment.⁷

An "order" within the meaning of this provision has been defined to be the judgment or conclusion of the court, upon any motion or proceeding.⁸ And it is clear that the term "order" includes cases where the court denies as well as where it grants affirmative relief.⁹ In several early cases it was held necessary that the order, to be appealable by virtue of this code section, depend in some way upon the judgment itself or follow it in logical sequence or in the same line of proceedings. These cases, however, have been overruled, because adding limitations not contemplated by the code.¹⁰ The legislature, says an early case, seems to have been of the opinion that any order was sufficiently within the line of procedure when it came in the order of succession designated in the statute; viz., after final judgment.¹¹ The necessity for this provision allowing appeals from special orders after judgment is apparent when it is considered that an appeal from the judgment would only bring up the record of the proceedings resulting in the judgment, and that such appeal may have been taken and even disposed of before the making of the order complained of. Furthermore, any such test would be unsatisfactory and would in many instances be productive of utmost confusion and most profitless preliminary discussion.¹²

It does not follow, however, that any order subsequent to the final judgment in point of time is appealable. It is necessary that the order affect the judgment in some manner or bear some relation to it either by way of enforcing it or staying its execution.¹³ Because they did not bear such relation to the judgment it was held that an appeal would not lie from an order denying a motion to dismiss a motion for new trial,¹⁴ an order relieving a party moving for a new trial from his failure to present his bill of exceptions for settlement in time,¹⁵ or a ruling in a supplementary proceeding upon the admission of evidence.¹⁶ Such orders do not dispose of the motion or proceeding itself, and until some order is made which in effect grants or denies the motion for a new trial, neither party is aggrieved, and there is nothing to appeal from.¹⁷

The order must, of course, be one made in the cause in which the judgment was rendered. If made in an independent proceeding, it must be appealed, if at all, as a final judgment in a special proceeding.¹⁸ But an order is none the less a special order after final judgment because it is made by a judge other than the one who tried the case. The acts of such judge are only ancillary to the jurisdiction of the court which rendered the judgment.¹⁹ Orders made in the justice's or police or other inferior courts are not included in this code section, as the next following section expressly provides that section 963 shall not apply to cases appealed from such courts.²⁰

§ 25. Appeal from Part of Judgment or Order.—Although it is not expressly provided that a party may appeal from a part of a judgment, the right to do so is recognized by section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides in substance that an appeal is taken by filing and serving a notice of appeal stating the appeal from the judgment or order or some specific part thereof.¹ In this connection a litigant has the same right to appeal from a portion of an order that he has to appeal from a portion of a judgment.² When, however, the trial court strikes out a portion of a complaint seeking certain relief, and thereafter tries the cause on the remaining averments and does not, in terms in its judgment, refuse to grant such relief, the plaintiff cannot take an appeal from a refusal to grant such relief as from a part of the judgment.³ When an appeal from a part of a judgment or order is properly taken, obviously the appellate court will review only that part of the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken, provided that portion is severable from the remainder of the judgment or order.

II. PARTICULAR JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS APPEALABLE.

§ 26. Parties and Pleadings.—An appeal will not lie from an order substituting a party plaintiff,⁴ or adding a new party defendant,⁵ as they are not final judgments and no appeal is given therefrom. But an order denying an application to intervene in an action ends the litigation as to the intervener and may be appealed by him immediately free and unhampered by the subsequent proceedings in the action or final judgment rendered against the defendant.⁶ The applicant is not required to procure the entry of a more formal judgment, as the most verbose statement could not state the determination more accurately or effectually.⁷ So, also, when a demurrer to an intervention already allowed is sustained and judgment is rendered against the intervener, he may appeal therefrom without waiting final judgment in the action, as the judgment on demurrer is a final determination as to him.⁸

It is well established that no appeal will lie from an order sustaining a demurrer to a portion or the whole of a pleading, or dismissing it in whole or in part.⁹ Neither will an appeal lie from an order overruling a demurrer.¹⁰

Such orders are interlocutory in character and are not mentioned among those in the statute which are made the subject of appeal. The rulings on demurrer are, however, reviewable on appeal from the judgment itself,¹¹ and when a party elects to stand on his pleading and a judgment sustaining the demurrer is rendered, the party may appeal from the judgment.¹² Such a judgment is a final judgment whether it declares that the plaintiff take nothing, or that the action shall abate, or that the action be dismissed.¹³

It is also well settled that no appeal will lie from the following interlocutory orders: An order directing that a complaint be made more definite and certain,¹⁴ an order denying an application to file an amended pleading,¹⁵ or a supplemental pleading,¹⁶ an intermediate judgment denying relief upon a cross-complaint,¹⁷ an order allowing judgment on the pleadings,¹⁸ an order striking a demurrer from the files,¹⁹ and an order made on a motion to strike out a pleading or portions thereof.²⁰

§ 27. Dismissal and Nonsuit.—An order refusing to dismiss an action or overruling a motion for a nonsuit is clearly interlocutory, and, as it is not enumerated in the code, unappealable.¹ The action of the court in such a matter may be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, if properly presented by the record.^{1a} An order dismissing an action without regard to the relative rights of the parties as shown by the pleadings is not a final judgment in a strict sense, but it is treated as such for all the purposes of taking an appeal because it finally disposes of the particular action as effectually as would any formal judgment based on ruling on demurrer or on findings or verdict on the facts.² The code provides that an action may be dismissed or a judgment of nonsuit entered when either party fails to appear on the trial and the other party appears and asks for a dismissal, when upon the trial and before the submission of a cause the plaintiff abandons it,³ or when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury, and the defendant moves for a nonsuit.⁴ These dismissals must be made by orders of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and are effective for all purposes when so entered.⁵ From the language of this code section it is seen that in terms the law recognizes a judgment of nonsuit as distinguished from a judgment of dismissal, and further declares that the order of nonsuit entered upon the minutes of the court constitutes this judgment of nonsuit. It is thus clear that in the present state of the law, a judgment of nonsuit, as distinguished from a judgment of dismissal usually following an order of nonsuit, is appealable.⁶ So, also, with reference to other orders of dismissal, though the code does not carry this language into the other provisions relating to dismissals, the effect of the dismissal can be none other than that specified in the section just referred to, and the order when entered in the minute-book is in nature a final judgment, from which an appeal may be taken.⁷

§ 28. Trials and References.—Because they are interlocutory and are not enumerated in the code as appealable orders, no appeal will lie from the following orders: An order denying a motion to introduce certain evidence, or an order refusing to vacate such an order,⁹ a ruling refusing to strike out testimony,¹⁰ an order overruling a motion to reopen a case,¹¹ an order amending the findings,¹² and an order of the court denying a motion to amend its minutes.¹³ An order staying all proceedings in an action until further order of the court is not an order granting an injunction against the parties within the meaning of the code and is not appealable.¹⁴ No appeal lies from an order appointing a referee,¹⁵ or from an order vacating an order of reference and the proceedings subsequent thereto,¹⁶ or from an order overruling exceptions to a referee's report.¹⁷ The confirmation of a referee's report and an order that judgment be entered is not a final judgment, when the court has not pronounced judgment on the facts found or determined the particular relief to which the plaintiff is entitled.¹⁸ An order setting aside the report of a referee appointed to take an account or to ascertain a fact is interlocutory and not the subject of direct appeal.¹⁹ But the decision of a referee on the whole issue stands as a decision of the court, and the entry of judgment follows as a matter of course. A motion then to set aside the report and for a new trial is after judgment, and an appeal lies from the order on the motion.²⁰ Actions for divorce are an exception to the latter rule. The referee is not authorized to make findings of fact, and an order purporting to set aside his findings and sending the case back for further testimony is interlocutory only.¹

§ 29. Judgments, Costs and Attorneys' Fees.—An order denying a motion to correct a judgment or the file-mark is appealable as a special order after final judgment.² If a motion to amend a judgment is granted, an appeal may be taken from the judgment as modified. In such case it is the judgment as modified which is the final judgment in the case; the original judgment, being superseded, is without force.³ Whether an appeal will lie from the order allowing the amendment is not clear. It has been held that an appeal from such order is premature, as the only judgment appealable is the modified judgment as entered.⁴ There are, however, expressions in some of the cases which seem to indicate that such an appeal will lie.⁵ When a judgment or decree of a su-

However, such order is appealable as a special order made after judgment under the provisions of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁸ A judgment rendered in a suit brought to vacate a judgment on the ground of fraud and collusion is a final judgment and appealable as such.⁹ An order on a motion to retax costs made before entry of judgment is interlocutory and not appealable.¹⁰ But when such an order is made after judgment, it is appealable as a special order after final judgment, as the motion to tax a cost bill is a special motion that is not a proceeding as of course in the cause.¹¹

An order of a lower court allowing a respondent attorney's fees in the supreme court stands upon the same plane as the last order and is appealable.¹² So, also, an order in a divorce action directing the payment of sums of money for counsel fees and costs to enable the wife to contest a motion for new trial is appealable.¹³ Since, however, a reversal of a judgment and remand of the cause for a new trial places the parties in the same position as if a new trial had never been had, it follows that an order on a motion to retax costs is not appealable after such reversal.¹⁴

the order is to destroy the judgment, and the action of the court can only be reviewed upon an appeal from the order.¹⁶ And as it has repeatedly been held that an appeal lies from a void judgment,¹⁷ it follows that an order setting aside a judgment in form, on the ground that it is in fact invalid, is also appealable.¹⁸

Order refusing to vacate judgment or order.—When a judgment or order is not the subject of appeal, it cannot be made reviewable by the device of moving to set it aside and appealing from the order denying the motion.¹⁹ This is in accord with the rule which forbids a party to do indirectly what is forbidden to be done directly.²⁰ Even where there is a right of appeal from a judgment or order, a party cannot ordinarily take an appeal from a subsequent order denying a motion to vacate the judgment or order complained of, under such circumstances that the motion merely calls upon the court to repeat or overrule the former ruling on the same facts.¹ If the

The first decision being reviewable, the refusal to alter it any number of times will not make it less so.⁷

This rule applies not only to judgments and orders made in actions formerly denominated actions at law, but it applies as well to orders in probate proceedings,⁸ and to orders in actions formerly denominated suits in equity. The fact that the constitution grants the supreme court appellate jurisdiction only "in such probate matters as may be provided by law" and in "all cases in equity" does not affect this question, for it is well settled that interlocutory orders in equity cases, like all orders in probate, may be made the subject of direct appeal only when such appeal is authorized by statute.⁹

§ 31. Limitation of Rule as to Order Refusing to Vacate.—The rule which forbids an appeal from an order refusing to vacate an appealable judgment or order is not without its limitations. A reason for refusing to entertain the appeal is that the party aggrieved had already had an opportunity to appeal from the same ruling; and he cannot extend his time for taking an appeal by making the court repeat its ruling. This reason cannot apply where the circumstances are such that no appeal could have been taken from the first order,¹⁰ or when such an appeal from the first order would be vain for lack of a record showing the rights of the aggrieved party.¹¹ For example, a person not a party to a proceeding resulting in a judgment or order against him is not authorized to appeal from the judgment or order rendered therein, but he may make himself a party by moving to set aside such judgment or order, and if his motion is denied, he may, on appeal from that order, have the proceeding of which he complains reviewed not only for excess of jurisdiction but also for error.¹² Indeed, this is a practice to be commended and encouraged for its convenience, for it is to be presumed that the attention of the court being drawn to its excess of jurisdiction, the order or judgment would be vacated on motion without the trouble and expense of certifying the record to a court of review.¹³

Under this rule, an appeal may be taken from an order refusing to set aside an injunction against one who is not a party to an action.¹⁴ And a party defendant not served at all and therefore not having his day in court, and thus having no opportunity for making a record for appeal, should be entitled to the same privilege.¹⁵ Again, an owner of land involved in a suit who is not a party thereto may move to set aside an order irregularly allowing a writ of assistance and appeal from an order denying his motion.¹⁶ This course is permitted also where the first

judgment or order was made improperly and ex parte.¹⁷ And, of course, an appeal may be taken from an order denying a motion made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to vacate a judgment obtained through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect.¹⁸

In every case where this course has been allowed, the order from which the appeal was taken was within the class of orders made directly appealable by the code. And therefore the court in permitting a direct appeal was merely relieving the appellant from a rule of practice to the effect that an order refusing to vacate a prior appealable order, although described as appealable by the statute, could not be made to take the place of an appeal from the original order.¹⁹ It follows that if the original order is not appealable, an order refusing to vacate it is not appealable, even when the circumstances otherwise authorizing an appeal from a refusal to vacate an order exist.²⁰ The only theory upon which an appeal could lie from an order refusing to vacate, where such order is not made the subject of a direct appeal by the code, would be that the order refusing to vacate is identical with the original order. Such theory is not tenable in reason, and is inconsistent with the rulings of the court. This is made clear by the holdings to the effect that an appeal from an order refusing to vacate does not stay execution of the original order.¹

Not only is it necessary that the order sought to be vacated be appealable, but it is also necessary that the motion to vacate it be authorized by law. If not so au-court cites this case and says: "An exception to the rule is made when the original order was irregularly issued."

thorized, no appeal will lie from the order denying the motion.²

§ 32. Ex Parte Orders.—Another exception to the rule that an appeal cannot be taken from an order refusing to vacate an appealable order exists where the original judgment or order was made improperly and ex parte. In such case the aggrieved party may have no knowledge of the order until after the expiration of the time for appeal, and the only appeal which can avail the appellant is an appeal from an order refusing to vacate, for in no other way, where evidence is submitted, can the appellant present his showing against the order.³ Thus, a defendant may move to vacate an order allowing a writ of assistance issued on the ex parte application of the grantee of the purchaser of property at a sheriff's sale,⁴

2. Eureka & T. R. R. Co. v. McGrath, 74 Cal. 49, 15 Pac. 360, holding that in a proceeding for condemnation of a right of way for a railroad, an order denying a motion by the plaintiff to set aside a judgment in its favor, on the ground that since the rendition of judgment it had determined to change the line of its road, is not appealable. There is no statutory provision for the motion made, and the contention is untenable that the rule is inapplicable because the motion was based on new matter occurring subsequently to the judgment.

3. Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 150 Pac. 989 (where an order dismissing a will contest is made after the death of the contestant, the personal representative of the contestant may move to vacate the order of dismissal and to substitute himself as a party, and appeal from an order denying his motion); Title

4. Green v. Hebbard, 95 Cal. 39, 30 Pac. 202; City of San Jose v. Fulton, 45 Cal. 316. It is true that the decision in this case was based upon the fact that the grantee of the purchaser was a stranger to the record, an intruder, and therefore not entitled to the writ of assistance. But in Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 Pac. 48, the court says the simple fact is that the court found the rule would operate unjustly and refused to enforce it. The court recognized the fact that to enforce such a rule would be practically to deny an appeal, and it would often amount to the same thing if the party injured is com-or on the ex parte application of the purchaser himself.⁵ This exception is not confined to cases which are strictly ex parte, but extends also to cases where the service is constructive. A motion to set aside the judgment or order is the only proper method of presenting the facts upon which the motion is made, and of getting them into the record.⁶ These cases, of course, arise when the motions are made after the time limited by law for the appeal has expired.⁷

§ 33. Enforcement of Judgment.—An appeal may be taken from the following orders relating to the enforcement of judgment, as they are special orders made after final judgment: An order directing the issuance of a writ of assistance;⁸ an order directing the issuance of a writ of possession, and an order refusing to set aside the execution of the writ;⁹ an order directing the issuance of execution upon default of justification by the sureties on the undertaking on appeal;¹⁰ an order setting aside an execution issued on a judgment and perpetually staying its enforcement;¹¹ an order refusing to quash an execution;¹² an order directing that money paid into court of appraisers.¹ As this application need not be made to the court which rendered the judgment, it is clear that the proceeding is independent of the action, and, therefore, orders made therein are not special orders made after final judgment. An order in such a proceeding which merely amounts to a refusal to give instructions to appraisers is not a final judgment. Nor is an order made after a report of the appraisers showing an excess of value, and remanding the matter to the appraisers for the purpose of making a division of the property, a final judgment. While the code does not make provision for further proceedings after division, the natural course would be for the appraisers to report their action to the court, and for the court thereupon to confirm the report. The order of confirmation would be the final judgment in the proceeding.² Where a purchaser at an execution sale has been dispossessed of the property purchased and brings an action to be restored to possession, a judgment of restitution is a final and appealable judgment.³

peal from an order granting a new trial was allowed only in an action or proceeding tried by a jury where such trial by jury is a matter of right.⁷ Under the amendment of 1915, no appeal lies from an order granting a new trial in an action at law tried by the court without a jury, or in an action in equity which is tried by a jury.⁸ But in those cases in which the order is appealable, the party complaining should appeal from the order within the time allowed by law, as he will not be allowed after taking his chances upon a second trial to rely on any error in granting the new trial.⁹

With reference to orders denying new trials, the code provides for a settlement of the bill of exceptions after the determination of the proceeding on the motion so as to bring up the proceedings thereon for review on an appeal from the judgment.¹⁰

Because they are special orders made after final judgment, it has been held that an appeal may be taken from an order striking from the files affidavits on a motion for a new trial;¹¹ an order denying a motion to be relieved from a failure to serve in time a notice of intention

§ 35. Bills of Exceptions and Statements on New Trial. No appeal lies from an order refusing to settle a bill of exceptions or, under the former practice, a statement on new trial. If the party has complied with the law and the trial judge erroneously concludes that he has not so complied and refuses to settle the bill or statement, the proper and exclusive remedy is mandamus to compel the settlement.¹⁶ But if the party has not complied with the requirements of the law in the matter of the presentation of his proposed bill of exceptions, he is not entitled to have the same settled unless relieved by the court from his default under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He is required to move for relief under this section, and if the court refuses to grant relief, to appeal from the order of refusal.¹⁷ Mandamus is not a proper remedy in a motion to strike out or set aside a statement on new trial.⁴

§ 36. Provisional Remedies.—The Code of Civil Procedure expressly authorizes the taking of an appeal from an order dissolving⁵ or refusing to dissolve⁶ an attachment. It has been contended that this provision relates only to orders made under section 556 of the code, which provides for discharging the writ of attachment where “the same was improperly or irregularly issued,” and that it does not apply to orders for the release of attached property on the ground that it was not liable to seizure. But this contention was held unsound, the court saying that the word “attachment” in this code section is quite broad enough to include seizure and custody under the writ as well as the writ itself.⁷ But an order denying an application for an order directing the sale of perishable personal property seized under an attachment is not appealable, as the proceeding in which it is applied for is merely in aid of the main relief sought in the action, and the order cannot be regarded as a final judgment.⁸

provision for an appeal from an order refusing to vacate such appointment,¹⁰ or from an order discharging a receiver.¹¹ A receiver may appeal directly from an order made before judgment disallowing his final account,¹² but an order approving a current account of a receiver which shows on its face that it is not final, is not appealable.¹³ An order settling the final account of a receiver, and directing the payment of his compensation by one of the parties, though made before final judgment in the action in which he is appointed, is a final determination of the rights of the parties as to such matter and is appealable as such.¹⁴ And an order after judgment directing a sale by a receiver of the property of the husband for the purpose of satisfying a judgment of alimony is appealable as a special order made after final judgment.¹⁵ dissolving,¹⁷ an injunction. Though the Practice Act as amended in 1854 did not authorize the taking of an appeal from an order refusing to grant or dissolve an injunction, both of these orders are now appealable.¹⁸ These provisions make no distinction between injunctions granted ex parte and injunctions granted on notice,¹⁹ and as temporary restraining orders require the defendant to refrain from doing some act, it follows that they, though temporary, are injunctions within the meaning of the statutes relating to appeals,²⁰ and that an appeal may be taken from an ex parte order granting such temporary restraining order.¹ The fact that such ex parte order may be vacated or modified without notice does not deprive the party of his remedy by appeal. These are cumulative remedies, and the defendant may pursue either remedy.² If the defendant makes a motion to dissolve a temporary restrain-

2. Sullivan v. Triunfo Gold & Silver Min. Co., 33 Cal. 385. The fact that these remedies are cumulative is shown by the history of the statutes. In 1851, the only remedy before final judgment against an ex parte order granting an injunction was by motion to dissolve it. In 1854, the order granting the injunction was made appealable. The latter provision was subsequent and clearly indicated an intention to provide a further remedy.

ing order, an order denying such motion is likewise appealable as an order refusing to dissolve an injunction.³

After the defendant has answered, an injunction cannot be granted except upon notice or an order to show cause. An order on notice granting a preliminary injunction is clearly appealable under the code.⁴ But a refusal of an application for an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue is not an order refusing to grant an injunction within the meaning of the code.⁵ Where no right is given by the law to move for the dissolution of an order on notice granting an injunction, an order granting such a motion will be reversed on appeal,⁶ while an order denying such a motion will be affirmed.⁷ An order modifying a preliminary injunction by striking out the portion which is mandatory in character has the effect of dissolving it, within the meaning of the statute, and is the subject of a direct appeal.⁸

On the rendition of final judgment in the action granting a permanent injunction, any preliminary injunction that has been granted becomes merged therein and loses its operative force. There is thereafter no existing order granting an injunction from which a direct appeal may be taken.⁹ Where after an appeal from a final judgment granting an injunction the trial court makes an order restraining the defendant from doing the acts inhibited by the final judgment, the later order is appealable as an order granting an injunction or as a special order after judgment. The fact that the trial court may have no jurisdiction to make it does not preclude an appeal.¹⁰

§ 38. Partition Suits.—Since 1864, the statute has specifically authorized the taking of an appeal from such interlocutory judgment in actions for partition as determines the rights and interests of the respective parties and directs partition to be made.¹¹ Prior thereto such a judgment was reviewable on appeal from the judgment in an action for partition entered upon the confirmation of the report of the commissioners appointed to make the partition, which is a final judgment and appealable as such.¹² An interlocutory decree in a partition suit directing a sale of the common property is to be regarded as a final judgment with respect to subsequent orders in aid of its execution. Such a decree not only determines the several interests of the cotenants, the amounts and priorities of the several liens, but also adjudges the property incapable of partition and directs that it be sold and that the proceeds be distributed by the referee.¹³ Furthermore, an appeal may be taken from the following orders as special orders after final judgment; an order confirming the sale of the common property,¹⁴ or refusing to confirm the sale,¹⁵ an order directing the issuance of a writ of assistance,¹⁶ and an order refusing to vacate such an order when made ex parte.¹⁷

§ 39. Certiorari, Mandamus, Prohibition and Quo Warranto.—There is not in the present, nor was there in the former constitutions, any provision conferring appellate jurisdiction in cases of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition or quo warranto. Under the former constitutions this jurisdiction was repeatedly exercised, and as the provisions relating to this subject were copied into the later constitutions without change, it will be presumed that it was done with knowledge of the interpretation given to it, and with the intention of adopting that construction.¹⁸ Moreover, the code classifies as special proceedings, proceedings to procure the writs of mandamus,¹⁹ certiorari or review,²⁰ and prohibition.¹ And final judgments therein are appealable as final judgments in special proceedings.² Accordingly, an appeal will lie from an order of a superior court granting an application for a writ of mandamus,³ an order denying such application,⁴ a judgment

With reference to proceedings in the nature of quo warranto, the fact that the legislature may have changed the procedure, enlarged the remedy and given it a new name, cannot operate to deprive a party of his remedy by appeal.⁸

§ 40. Void Judgments and Orders.—It has been repeatedly held that an appeal may be taken from an order or judgment notwithstanding the fact that it is void.⁹ The appealability of an order is determined by what it purports to decide or adjudicate, and not by its actual operative effect. If it is one of the orders or judgments enumerated by the code as appealable, the fact that it is unenforceable does not deprive the party aggrieved of his right to appeal.¹⁰ He may appeal from it and have it set aside as cumbering the records.¹¹ And it cannot be successfully contended that by appealing therefrom he concedes that there is a proper judgment. He concedes only that there is a judgment in form, which he claims is erroneous to the extent of rendering it void.¹²

The appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court and of the district courts of appeal over the judgments of superior courts include those in which that court wrongfully assumed jurisdiction as well as those in which it was properly entertained. If the court of review should refuse to take jurisdiction in such case, the judgment would remain as originally pronounced.¹³ So an appeal may be taken from a judgment rendered by a judge whose term of office had expired,¹⁴ and where a judgment of dismissal is entered by a clerk at the direction of the plaintiff, notwithstanding a counterclaim or cross-complaint.¹⁵

On the other hand, the mere fact that a judgment or order is unauthorized and void, does not make it appealable if it is not one of the judgments or orders which are made appealable by the code. And in passing on the appealability of a particular judgment or order on the hearing of a motion to dismiss, the appellate court will examine only the order itself. It will not review the authority of the trial court to make it.¹⁶ default and judgments after issue joined. The former is as much a final judgment as the latter.¹⁷ While it has generally been held that a default judgment is in effect a judgment by consent, and that a direct appeal will not lie from a consent judgment, it is well settled that an appeal may be taken from a judgment by default entered by the clerk.¹⁸ This right is unaffected by the existence of a remedy by motion in the superior court to set the judgment aside.¹⁹ No appeal, however, lies from an order entering a default against a party,²⁰ or from an order refusing to enter a default,¹ or from an order granting² or denying³ a motion to vacate a default upon which no judgment has been given. The latter order is not an order after judgment, and it is not one of the interlocutory orders enumerated in section 963 of the code.⁴ But an order made after judgment, refusing upon the motion of the plaintiff to set aside the default of the defendant and fix a time in which to plead, is appealable.⁵

§ 42. Miscellaneous Judgments and Orders.—A judgment rendered in a suit of the people under section 11 of the Bank Commissioners' Act, which adjudges that the defendant bank is insolvent, and otherwise adjudges as provided in the act, is a final and appealable judgment. And this is true, notwithstanding the judgment, by its terms, is until further order of court, as such injunction cannot properly be dissolved prior to the settlement of the affairs of the bank.⁶ While the code expressly authorizes an appeal from an interlocutory order in actions to redeem property from a mortgage thereof or lien thereon, determining such right to redeem and directing an accounting,⁷ it does not authorize an appeal from an interlocutory judgment for an accounting in an action to enforce a constructive trust where no lien exists.⁸ Nor will an appeal lie from an order directing an assignee for the benefit of creditors of an insolvent to account,⁹ or an order refusing to set aside a stipulation.¹⁰

Orders on motion for change of venue or transfer of cause.—The code specifically authorizes the taking of an appeal from an order changing¹¹ or refusing to change¹² a place of trial; but it makes no provision for an appeal from an order made before judgment refusing to transfer a cause to a federal court for trial,¹³ or from an order refusing to set aside such an order.¹⁴ The remedy in such cases rests in proceedings by mandamus.¹⁵

Judgment pursuant to mandate of appellate court.—The right to appeal from a judgment entered in a superior court by direction of an appellate court undoubtedly exists.¹⁶ For some purposes the judgment entered pursuant to such direction is on a par with a judgment of the appellate court, but great injustice might be done if such judgment were not appealable, as serious doubts may arise as to whether the judgment entered is the judgment ordered.¹⁷ If the lower court enters a judgment not in accordance with the directions of an appellate court, the error may be corrected on appeal,¹⁸ but if the judgment is in strict compliance with the mandate, there is no ground for an appeal and the judgment will be affirmed.¹⁹

of appeal in probate matters is purely statutory, and exists only in those cases in which it is given by statute.¹

The particular orders and judgments in probate proceedings from which appeals are allowed are enumerated in subdivision 3 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is well established that appeals in probate matters may be taken only from the judgments or orders therein mentioned.²

Subdivision 1 of section 963, establishing the right to appeal from final judgments in actions or proceedings generally, does not apply to probate proceedings, regardless of the fact that for certain purposes a proceeding in probate is a civil case or a special proceeding, or of the fact that within certain views an order in probate is a final judgment.³ So, also, subdivision 2 of section 963, establishing the right to appeal from orders after final judgment, has often been held not to apply to probate proceedings. If the rule were otherwise, the code provision relating to appeals in probate matters could be disregarded by assuming that a probate matter not mentioned therein is a final judgment, and an order refusing to revoke it is a "special order made after final judgment."⁴

The fact that a particular order not enumerated in the code section is in excess of jurisdiction does not render such order appealable regardless of the code. If the order is in excess of jurisdiction, the party aggrieved must pursue some other appropriate remedy.⁵ This rule is subject to the limitation that an appeal will lie from an order on motion for a new trial, in those proceedings in probate in which such a motion is proper.⁶ The provision in subdivision 2 of section 963 authorizing an appeal from such orders embraces them whether made in probate proceedings or in civil actions, as section 1714 of the code provides that the provision of part II of the code relative to new trials and appeals, except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title (relating to probate proceedings), apply to the proceedings mentioned in this title.⁷

§ 44. Particular Orders Appealable.—With reference to the particular orders in probate proceedings which are directly appealable, subdivision 3 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the taking of an appeal in the following cases: From a judgment or order granting or refusing to grant, revoking or refusing to forced against him in his lifetime by proper action,⁵ the term as used in this provision has been given a broad meaning. It has been held to include a demand for attorney's fees presented, allowed and ordered paid as a claim against the estate,⁶ and also a demand for collateral inheritance tax, the payment of which is directed as a claim against the estate.⁷ The word "claim," it has been said, is applied to a demand against an estate after as well as before it has been allowed, but it is limited to debts and claims which can be allowed, rejected or ordered paid. If the demand is not of this character, orders relating to it are not appealable, even though it be conceded that it is a demand against the estate. A claim by a purchaser at an executor's sale for the return of money paid to the executor, after reversal of an order confirming the sale, is not of this character; and no appeal lies from an order dismissing a petition for an order that the executor return such money.⁸ An order vacating the allowance of a claim against an estate is not enumerated in the code and as a consequence is not an appealable order.⁹

lies from an order discontinuing an allowance, as such an order is not equivalent to an order refusing to grant an allowance within the meaning of the code section. If the trial court is without jurisdiction to make such an order, the proper remedy of the party is certiorari.¹¹

§ 45. Orders as to Probate of Will and Appointment of Representative or Guardian.—The Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal may be taken: “From a judgment or order granting or refusing to grant, revoking or refusing to revoke letters testamentary, or of administration, or of guardianship; or admitting or refusing to admit a will to probate, or against or in favor of the validity of a will, or revoking or refusing to revoke the probate thereof.”¹² Section 1413 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the appointment of special administrators provides that no appeal must be allowed from the appointment. In giving effect to both provisions of the code, it would seem that the quoted portion of section 963 relates only to orders appointing general administrators.¹³ The provision authorizing an appeal from an order revoking letters of guardianship refers to the guardianship of the person or estate of a minor, or of an insane or incompetent person for which provision is made in chapter 14 of title XI, part III of the Code of Civil Procedure. It does not include an order appointing a guardian ad litem to represent the infant or incompetent person authorized by section 372. No letters of guardianship are issued to a guardian ad litem, but his authority is evidenced by an entry in the minutes of the court appointing him. It follows also that an appeal will not lie from an order appointing a guardian ad litem.¹⁴ Under section 963 an appeal may be taken from an order appointing a guardian,¹⁵ an order denying a petition for letters of administration,¹⁶ an order vacating the appointment of an administrator,¹⁷ or refusing to do so.¹⁸ And as no provision is made therefor, no appeal lies from an order vacating an order substituting a trustee of an estate.¹⁹ The code authorizes an appeal from an order revoking the probate of a will,²⁰ and also from an order refusing to revoke probate,¹ although prior to 1901 it did not make provision for an appeal from the latter order.² An order dismissing a contest after probate is strictly in effect an order refusing to revoke the probate of a will and is appealable as such.³ But it has been held that an order setting aside a judgment refusing to admit a will to probate is not an appealable order.⁴

As an order refusing the probate of a will and an order appointing an administrator are distinct proceedings, they must be so regarded though in form a single order, and likewise an order revoking such orders must be deemed separate orders for the purpose of appeal. Consequently, though an appeal from that portion of the order revoking

the order denying probate will be dismissed, the appeal from that portion of the order revoking the appointment of the representative will be entertained.⁵

§ 46. Partition, Sale or Conveyance.—The Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal may be taken from a judgment or order “against or in favor of directing the partition, sale, or conveyance of real property.”⁶ This provision clearly authorizes an order of a probate court directing a personal representative to sell the land of his decedent.⁷ The fact that the will directs a sale to be made does not make such an order one requiring the personal representative to proceed to execute the will or show cause why he should not be removed, and thereby defeat the right to appeal. Such a contention is frivolous.⁸ So, also, an appeal will lie from an order confirming a sale of property under a power of sale in a will and directing a conveyance,⁹ from an order directing a resale of property formerly sold,¹⁰ and also from an order of a probate court granting specific performance of a contract of a decedent by directing an executor to execute a conveyance.¹¹ But an appeal does not lie from an order directing a personal representative to proceed with the sale of property, previously ordered to be sold.¹² The form of the order is not material as affecting the right of appeal, but the question in such case is, What is its legal effect? And because they are in legal effect orders against directing a sale, an appeal may be taken from an order refusing to hear evidence or confirm a sale,¹³ and an order vacating a prior order confirming a sale.¹⁴ But it does not follow from this that an appeal lies from an order refusing to set aside a previous order for the sale of lands.¹⁵

The word "conveyance" as used in the sections of the code relating to the recordation of written instruments embraces mortgages, and, considering the importance of an order authorizing an executor to mortgage a decedent's land, it is clear that the legislature intended in this code section to use the word in the same broad sense given to it in the statutes referred to. An appeal therefore will lie from an order directing a personal representative to mortgage the land of his decedent.¹⁶ be taken from an order purporting to settle an account before it is filed. The fact that such order is imperative does not defeat the right to appeal, as the question of the appealability of an order is to be determined by what it purports to decide, rather than by its actual operative effect.¹⁹

- No appeal, however, can be taken from an order denying a motion, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to vacate an order settling an account,²⁰ or from an order vacating a prior order settling the account of a personal representative.¹ In the later case, when the court again settles the account, the personal representative, if he then feels aggrieved, can appeal from the order settling it.²

The case provides also that appeals may be taken from a judgment or order refusing, allowing or directing the distribution or partition of an estate or any part thereof.³ Under this provision an appeal lies from an order directing a partial distribution of an estate.⁴ But no appeal lies from an order vacating a decree of distribution,⁵ or refusing to do so,⁶ or from an order suspending an order

IV. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

§ 48. In General.—The right to appeal to the supreme court or to a district court of appeal in actions at law is limited by the constitution to cases in which the demand exclusive of interest amounts to or is in excess of three hundred dollars. Under the constitution of 1849, the supreme court had jurisdiction in all cases when the matter in dispute exceeded two hundred dollars.¹⁰ This provision was amended in 1862. As amended it provided that the supreme court should have appellate jurisdiction in all cases at law where the demand, exclusive of interest, amounted to three hundred dollars.¹¹

The present constitution provides that the supreme court shall have jurisdiction on appeal from the superior courts in all cases in equity, except such as arise in justices' courts; also in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine, or in which the demand exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to two thousand dollars; also in all such probate matters as may be provided by law. The district courts of appeal shall have jurisdiction on appeal from the superior courts in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars, and does not amount to two thousand dollars; also, in all cases of forcible and unlawful entry and detainer (except such as arise in justices' courts), in proceedings in insolvency, and in actions to prevent or abate a nuisance; in proceedings of mandamus, certiorari and prohibition, usurpation of office, contesting elections and eminent domain, and in such other proceedings as may be provided by law (except cases in which appellate jurisdiction is given to the supreme court).¹²

to confer jurisdiction and authorize an appeal in cases in which the demand is less than that specified in the constitution.¹³ And if the amount is less than that prescribed, the supreme court has no jurisdiction either on appeal or writ of error.¹⁴

§ 49. Cases Subject to Pecuniary Limitations.—The constitution confers upon the supreme court appellate jurisdiction “in all cases in equity except such as arise in justices’ courts.” This jurisdiction is not made dependent upon the amount of the demand or the value of the property in controversy. Consequently, appeals in actions for the foreclosure of liens and street assessments may be taken regardless of the amount involved. So, also, as divorce actions are deemed to be equitable in character, orders made after judgment therein which direct the payment of money are appealable without regard to the amount named in the order.¹⁵ The same is true of appeals to a district court of appeal in actions to prevent or abate nuisances. The court has appellate jurisdiction over the whole and every part of the judgment in such an action, and, therefore, an appeal may be taken from that part of the judgment relating to costs, though less than three hundred dollars.¹⁶ The constitution confers appellate jurisdiction in all such probate matters as may be provided by law,¹⁷ and the legislature has authorized appeals in probate matters irrespective of the amount involved.¹⁸

The amount of the demand or the value of the property in controversy forms an element in determining appellate jurisdiction only in "cases at law,"¹⁹ and, by virtue of the express terms of the constitution, only in such cases at law which do not involve title or possession of real estate,²⁰ and which do not involve the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll or municipal fine.¹ An action in the nature of quo warranto in which a fine is prayed for usurpation of office is a "case at law" within the rule, and is within the jurisdiction of the appellate court where the amount of the demand, exclusive of interest, is three hundred dollars.² On the other hand, there is no demand for a sum of money in a contempt proceeding, and such a demand, if made, would be without avail. Therefore, though the amount of the fine imposed is in excess of three hundred dollars, the right to appeal from the judgment cannot be predicated upon this section of the constitution.³ Again, the jurisdiction of an appeal from a judgment of a superior court rendered in a certiorari case does not depend upon the amount in controversy. such appeal the court does not review the merits of the case. While, in determining whether the inferior court, board or officer had jurisdiction, it may or may not have occasion to look to the amount in dispute, it does not do so for the purpose of adjudicating the amount, or any question involving the right of either party to a judgment on the merits.⁴

§ 50. Determination of Amount and Test.—There is a clear distinction between the term “matter in dispute” in the constitution of 1849 and the term “demand” as found in the amendment of 1862 and subsequent constitutions. The term “matter in dispute” has been defined to mean the subject of litigation.⁵ This is not necessarily the amount demanded in the complaint. If the verdict be for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeal, it is sufficient if the amount demanded in the complaint exceeds two hundred dollars.⁶ But if the verdict be for the plaintiff, and he appeal, the matter in dispute is the difference between the amount demanded in the complaint and the amount of the verdict.⁷ Upon the same principle, where an appeal is taken by a defendant from a judgment against him, the amount in dispute is the amount of the judgment, unless he has interposed a counterclaim, in which case the amount in dispute is the difference between the amount claimed and the amount of the judgment.⁸

8. Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198; Crandall v. Blen, 15 Cal. 407

If interest on a demand be claimed, the interest due should be added in estimating the "matter in dispute,"⁹ but costs being merely incidental to the action, constitute no part of the matter in dispute.¹⁰ The same is true of any amount adjudged as percentage.¹¹ The "demand," on the other hand, is the amount claimed in the complaint, exclusive of interest and costs. Interest is not to be considered in this connection because expressly excluded by the constitution; nor costs because they are merely incidental to the action.¹²

The jurisdiction is in no way dependent upon the counterclaim set up by the defendant.¹³ Nor, it would seem, is the jurisdiction affected by an admission in the answer of a portion of the demand which reduces the amount in dispute to less than three hundred dollars. At all events, where the amount of the demand is put in issue by answer, the amount is not reduced so as to defeat the jurisdiction of the appellate court by stipulations at the trial or admissions made in appellant's brief that a portion of the demand was due the plaintiff.¹⁴ So,

Seawall, 12 Cal. 280, where the court said there is no showing that the costs swelled the matter in dispute to more than two hundred dollars.

14. Morgan v. County of San Diego, 3 Cal. App. 455, 86 Pac. 720. The court says that the jurisdiction of the superior court is to be determined by the prayer of the complaint; and it being for more than three hundred dollars and "there being no admission in the answer that any portion of the amount claimed in the complaint is due," but, on the contrary, a denial that anything is due, there can be no question that the supreme court has jurisdiction.

also, the amount of the judgment rendered is immaterial as affecting appellate jurisdiction. If the plaintiff sues to recover a demand for five hundred dollars and recovers a judgment for three hundred dollars, his demand does not thereby become converted into a demand for two hundred dollars, for the purposes of an appeal, should he be dissatisfied with the judgment and desire to appeal.¹⁵ And when the defendant appeals, the right of appeal is not determined by the amount of the judgment against him, but by the amount demanded in the complaint.¹⁶

Therefore, under the later constitutions, the sole test of jurisdiction on appeal from a judgment rendered in an action for money is the ad damnum clause in the complaint,¹⁷ provided, it seems, that it does not appear from the record that the amount demanded in the prayer is feigned and has no support in the allegations upon which it is founded.¹⁸ In other words, if the amount sued for

§ 51. On Appeal from Orders for Attorney's Fees, Costs and Services.—In accordance with the test just laid down, the jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a special order made after final judgment is not dependent upon the amount of money named in the order, but, if the order is made in a case at law, upon the amount claimed in the complaint, exclusive of interest.²⁰ An appeal, therefore, may be taken from an order of a superior court after judgment relating to costs of suit, though the amount thereof is less than three hundred dollars.¹ This rule is equally applicable to interlocutory orders. The rule established by the more recent decisions is that in all cases, legal or equitable, where the courts of review have appellate jurisdiction of the matter brought in controversy in the lower court, the appealability of an order made before or after judgment is not controlled or affected by the amount of such order.² There is an apparent exception to this rule, where that portion of the judgment or order appealed from is rendered in an auxiliary proceeding in favor of or against a third person who is not, strictly speaking, a party to the action. For example, where in an action against an infant, the court orders the plaintiff, on whose application a guardian ad litem is appointed, to pay such guardian a fixed amount as services. Such order, though made a part of the judgment, is not, properly speaking, a portion of the judgment between the parties. It is in the nature of an independent judgment in favor of the guardian against the plaintiff, and jurisdiction is not dependent upon the original demand in the suit but upon the amount of the order. If the order is less than three hundred dollars, neither the supreme court nor the district court of appeal has jurisdiction thereof.³

D. RIGHT OF REVIEW AND PARTIES.

I. PERSONS ENTITLED TO APPEAL.

§ 52. Necessity That Appellant be a "Party."—The code provides as follows:

"Any party aggrieved may appeal in the cases prescribed in this title. The party appealing is known as the appellant, and the adverse party as the respondent."⁴

Under this code section, a person to be entitled to appeal must be a "party,"⁵ or a person in privity with a party;⁶ and he must be "aggrieved."⁷ The word "party" includes any person who is "a party to the action or proceeding,"⁸ or who is a "party to the record."⁹ One who is not a party to the record cannot appeal in his own name. One not a party to an action or proceeding may sometimes appeal, but in some way his interest must be made to appear in the record, and he must be a party to the ruling appealed from.¹⁰

The term "party" is not confined to persons who were original parties when the action or proceeding was first instituted, but it embraces, also, parties who are subsequently brought into the action.¹¹

Becoming "party to the record."—A person not a party to an action whose rights or interests are injuriously affected by a judgment or appealable order cannot appeal directly therefrom.¹² However, he may make himself a party to the record by moving to set aside such judgment or order and then appeal from the order denying his motion.¹³ Such proceeding can scarcely be said to make him a party to the action, but it does make him party to the record, and, as such, entitled to appeal. Indeed, unless he be permitted to make such motion and take an appeal from an adverse order thereon, he would be without remedy.¹⁴

One may become a party to the record in other ways also; for example, by an order to show cause. Thus, where a party holding money of an insolvent bank is upon show-cause proceedings directed to pay the money to a receiver, he is made a party to the record so far as such collateral proceeding is concerned, by the order to show cause, and is entitled to appeal.¹⁵ So, also, a sheriff, though not a party to the action, may appeal from an order requiring him to make a sale, without an indemnity bond, of property held by him under execution. The order in question has the effect of a judgment against him in a collateral proceeding, and the sheriff is made a party to the record by the order to show cause.¹⁶ However, strangers to an action do not become parties to the record so as to entitle them to appeal directly from a judgment or order, by reason of their being parties to a contract embodied in an order of court.¹⁷ If the record shows a person to be a party aggrieved, he may appeal although he had not previously appeared in the case.¹⁸

§ 53. Rule Applied.—An attorney of a party is not a party to the action and cannot, as a rule, appeal in his own name.¹⁹ A surety merely as such has no right to appeal from a judgment against the principal, if not made a party to the record, either originally or by intervention.²⁰ So, also, since under the code a guardian must prosecute or defend actions in the name of his ward, and is not himself a party to the action, it seems that he is not authorized to appeal in his own name.¹

Interveners and persons denied intervention.—By intervening in an action, the intervener becomes a party thereto and is entitled to appeal from the final judgment in the action if aggrieved thereby.² But an intervention in a special proceeding collateral to the main action does not make the intervener a party to the record so as to entitle him to appeal directly from a judgment or order in the action itself.³ There can be no intervention after trial and judgment, and an order allowing intervention at such time has no significance whatever as affecting the right of appeal.⁴

Whether one who has been denied permission to intervene in an action is a party so as to enable him to appeal from a final judgment therein, is uncertain. It has been held, where a party claiming to be the owner of lands condemned for public purposes was denied permission to intervene in the condemnation proceedings, that the applicant was not a party to the action because his suit to be made a party was rejected. And it was also held, since the judgment was not against him, and he was neither a party nor a privy to it, that he was not injured by it.⁵ In another case, which was an action against the principal in an undertaking, it was held that the sureties, by moving before the trial to be permitted to intervene in an action, on being refused, and by excepting to the action of the court, became parties to the record in a technical sense, entitling them to appeal; and they were also aggrieved by the judgment against the principal, as it concluded them as to their liability as sureties on the undertaking given in his behalf.⁶

applies to the purchaser upon a resale in probate under a power of sale contained in a will.⁸ By his act of purchase under a probate sale he submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in that proceeding, and is entitled to apply for such relief as the facts of the case may justify. He has a right to file objections to a confirmation of a sale by the court, and is a party aggrieved by the order of confirmation, as the code gives the right of appeal to any party aggrieved by the action of the court, whether he be interested in the estate or not.⁹

§ 54. Interest in Subject Matter of Suit.—It is a fundamental principle that no one can prosecute a suit who has no interest, either individually or in a representative capacity, in the subject matter in dispute. Those only can appeal whose interests are affected by the judgment or decree appealed from.¹⁰ If a party has no interest in the property in dispute, he cannot be aggrieved by any disposition the court may make of the property, even where the court gives it to the wrong party, and an appeal taken by him will be dismissed.¹¹

Where findings as to noninterest are not attacked.—The general rule above stated applies where the trial court finds that a party has no interest in the subject matter, and such party appeals without attacking the finding because unsustained by the evidence. In such case the findings are conclusive upon the appellate court as to the appellant's noninterest, and the appeal will be dismissed.¹² Thus, one suing as stockholder cannot appeal from the final judgment in the action where the court finds that he never was a stockholder, and this finding is not attacked.¹³ And an alleged heir who does not attack a finding that he is neither an heir of the testator nor related to him cannot appeal from a decree in a proceeding to establish heirship, or a decree of distribution, since in such case if there is no kinship in the appellant, he cannot be aggrieved.¹⁴ entitle him to appeal from an order discharging him, even if such order were appealable. He has an interest, however, in an order undertaking to settle his accounts and fix his compensation.¹⁵

§ 55. Assignment and Disclaimer of Interest.—The rule that an appellant must have an interest in the subject matter of the suit applies also where he at one time had an interest but assigned or relinquished his claim. A party defendant who has assigned all his interest in the subject of the action before suit brought has no such interest as entitles him to appeal from the judgment therein, where he has asked for no relief in his own behalf and no judgment for costs or otherwise is rendered against him.¹⁶ But where a judgment is rendered against him, the rule is otherwise,¹⁷ for if the appellant had no interest, he should not have been made a party, and no judgment should have been rendered against him.¹⁸

Effect of disclaimer of interest.—In actions relating to real property, a defendant who disclaims all interest in the property cannot appeal from a judgment affecting the property only.¹⁹ Thus, a defendant in an ejectment suit who in his pleadings disclaimed any right or title to the land in question or to its possession cannot appeal and carry on the litigation for the purpose of showing that some third person not a party to the suit had a better title than the plaintiff. He stands in no better position than any stranger to the controversy.²⁰ So, also, in an eminent domain proceeding against the state, it cannot appeal where it denied title to the premises, though the trial court found against its denial and decreed condemnation of the land. No personal judgment having been rendered against the state, to review the questions presented after its admission would be to consider mere abstract propositions of law.¹ The rule is applicable also where a party upon the trial admits his lack of interest, as where a plaintiff in an action to quiet title to several tracts of land admits on the trial that he has no interest in the tracts.²

A different rule obtains with reference to appeals from interlocutory orders in personal actions. Hence, where, upon the plaintiff's showing that a defendant is a necessary party, the defendant files a verified pleading stating that in the transaction complained of he was acting merely as agent for another, it has been held that he does not thereby deprive himself of the right to appeal from an interlocutory order in the action, prior to a verdict or decision.³

If the answer be yea, then the person is the 'party aggrieved.' But his right to the thing must be the immediate, and not the remote, consequence of the judgment, had it been differently given."⁶ But this test, however satisfactory to the case under consideration, by no means affords a complete definition of the phrase "party aggrieved." The better rule is that any person having an interest recognized by law in the subject matter, which interest is injuriously affected by the judgment, is a party aggrieved and entitled to be heard upon appeal.⁷ The difference between these tests is illustrated in a late case in which the parties interested in an estate entered into an agreement providing for distribution of the estate after payment of debts and costs of distribution, and one of the parties in violation of the agreement obtained a decree of partial distribution. Other parties claiming under the agreement are aggrieved by the decree, as their interests are liable to suffer detriment by a distribution before payment of debts, and may appeal, although if the text first stated were followed, they would be denied an appeal because they would not have received the property distributed to the respondent if the decree had not been made.⁸

The injury sustained by the appellant must ordinarily be an injury of a substantial nature,⁹ and the appellant must be aggrieved as a party and not collaterally.¹⁰ But it is not necessary that some action be taken on the judgment or order and that actual injury thereunder be done before an appeal can be taken. Indeed, it is to prevent just such consequences that appeals are taken.¹¹

§ 57. Party "Against" Whom Judgment is Rendered.— A party against whom a judgment or order is entered is a party aggrieved thereby.¹² Clearly, a party is not aggrieved by, and cannot appeal from, a judgment in his favor,¹³ or from an order granting an application made by himself,¹⁴ such, for example, as a judgment of non-suit rendered on his own motion.¹⁵ Moreover, a party named as defendant in the complaint is not aggrieved by a judgment against his codefendants in which he is not mentioned,¹⁶ or by a judgment denying relief against a codefendant.¹⁷

It is not necessary, however, that the judgment be actually against the appellant, in order that he be aggrieved thereby. For instance, a party entitled to a judgment without reservations is necessarily injured and aggrieved by any reservations rendering a judgment in his favor a nullity, and he may appeal therefrom.¹⁸ Again, where a court finds in accordance with an answer and dismisses an action but refuses to direct that the dismissal is a bar to another suit as prayed for by the defendant, the defendant is aggrieved by such refusal of the court.¹⁹

Special statutory proceeding to establish status of newspaper.—A special proceeding is provided by the code, whereby a newspaper may have its standing as “a newspaper of general circulation,” ascertained and established.²⁰ In such a proceeding, it has recently been held by the supreme court that the public has an interest, although not a pecuniary one, and that the statute authorizes any person to appear and contest the status of the newspaper or to move to vacate the judgment, whether a party to the proceeding or not. Furthermore, one who appears and contests the application must, for the purposes of appeal, be regarded as "aggrieved" by a judgment for the publisher, and it is not prescribed that the contestant shall have any pecuniary interest in the proceeding.¹

§ 58. Persons in Representative or Official Capacity.— An appeal may be taken by a person in a representative or official capacity, such as an executor or administrator, receiver or other trustee or custodian of funds for designated purposes, if he is a party aggrieved.² Since it is the duty of a personal representative of an estate to defend it from all unjust and illegal attacks which affect the interests of heirs, devisees, legatees or creditors, he is interested in any claim made against the estate which may diminish it, or may make the fund from which the creditors are to be paid insufficient for that purpose, and is aggrieved by any ruling thereon adverse to the estate.³ But as between the parties interested in the estate, it is the rule that administrators or executors, and also receivers, or other trustees or custodians of funds for designated purposes are not ordinarily affected by orders

Dec. 653, 191 Pac. 934 (the cases holding that it must appear by the record that the appellant is aggrieved in the sense that he has been deprived of a legal right by the judgment are not authority where the right of becoming a party is given by statute and the public has a direct interest in the controversy).

in reference to their disposition, and, therefore, will not be heard on appeal from such orders.⁴ An executor, for example, does not represent any of the legatees as against the others, nor may he litigate their claims at the expense of the estate,⁵ especially when he himself is the legatee whose claim he is attempting to maintain.⁶

But this last stated rule has its well-defined limitations. It does not operate wherever an order or decree involves a construction of the proper exercise of the duties of the officer, or wherever it presents a question as to the right or power of the trustee to comply with it, or wherever obedience to it might subject him to liability.⁷ Even where the order is one merely for the payment of funds, if any of these questions arise under it and personal liability may attach, the right of the officer to appeal is recognized and upheld.⁸

tion for partial distribution of an estate, it follows that, as personal representative, he may appeal from an order directing such distribution, if aggrieved.¹⁴ While perhaps an executor may not be aggrieved if the only effect of the partial distribution were to reduce the residue of the estate to the extent of the legacies distributed—the interest of the residuary devisees only being affected in such case¹⁵—it is clear that he is aggrieved and may appeal when there is a question as to the sufficiency of the assets to pay the legacies without loss to creditors.¹⁶

§ 59. Heirs, Legatees, Devisees and Creditors.—A probate of a will is a proceeding in rem binding on all persons interested in the will, and a contestant has a right to appeal therefrom.¹⁷ Likewise, the beneficiaries under a trust created by a will are aggrieved parties entitled to appeal from an order refusing probate thereof.¹⁸ Heirs have a right of appeal from an adverse order in a proceeding to contest letters of administration; ¹⁹ and they may appeal from an order allowing an attorney compensation for extraordinary services.²⁰ Since the heirs, legatees and devisees are the only ones who can be aggrieved by a decree of distribution, they are the proper parties to make the appeal therefrom.¹

Creditors.—While the heirs, legatees or devisees may appeal from a decree of distribution, an appeal cannot be taken by an executor of the estate, or a legatee or devisee, or a creditor of such estate whose claim has not been presented or litigated in the hearing.² Inasmuch as the liabilities for the estate are with the personal representative, errors in the accounts of such representative, if any there be, do not aggrieve a personal creditor of the representative within the meaning of the code.³ But a creditor of an insolvent estate is aggrieved by and may appeal from an erroneous order of family allowance;⁴ and the fact that the executor may also appeal does not deprive him of the right.⁵

§ 60. Other Persons.—Where the plaintiff in an interpleader suit has paid the money into court and the conflicting claimants have interpleaded, and the plaintiff has no further interest in the case, he cannot take an appeal from the judgment.⁶ And where an order for a writ of assistance upon ex parte application is inoperative against any other person than the defendant, such other persons are not aggrieved thereby and cannot appeal therefrom.⁷ It has been held, also, that a party to an action is not affected by a judgment upon motion against the surety upon the stay bond and that he may not appeal therefrom, unless it was taken against him or in some manner

amounted to an adjudication by which he is concluded in some right.⁸ And trustees who claim funds in the hands of the executor adversely to the estate, but who have not presented any claim against the estate, are not parties aggrieved by a decree distributing the funds to the heir.⁹

An alleged incompetent is held to be a party aggrieved by an order adjudging him incompetent and appointing a guardian to manage his property.¹⁰ And in a case where the right of a plaintiff in a claim and delivery suit to the possession of the property sued for depends upon ownership in the defendant, it has been decided that the defendant is aggrieved by an erroneous judgment for the plaintiff on the pleadings, upon his denial of ownership, where no costs are awarded and the judgment is not in the alternative.¹¹

Order granting new trial as to one party.—Where a judgment is rendered for the plaintiff and against one defendant, but is silent as against a codefendant, if the defendant against whom judgment is rendered obtains an order granting a new trial, such order does not affect the judgment in favor of the other defendant, and he, not being aggrieved thereby, cannot appeal therefrom.¹²

II. ESTOPPEL, LOSS OR WAIVER OF RIGHT.

§ 61. Waiver Generally.—It is clearly competent for a party to waive error by not appealing from an erroneous judgment or order.¹³ And it is well settled that a party cannot appeal from an order on a motion which he abandoned, as where he fails to appear and prosecute his motion.¹⁴

Agreement waiving right of appeal.—While in some jurisdictions it has been held that a mere promise or agreement not to prosecute an appeal will not divest an appellate court of its jurisdiction, it is a general rule that where such an agreement is made upon a valid and legal consideration, either before or after trial, it will be enforced in an appellate court and afford ground for dismissal of an appeal taken in violation thereof. It is perfectly competent for the parties to determine in the preliminary steps of the litigation whether they will place a question in dispute in a condition to be reviewed on appeal, and there is no reason why they may not waive an appeal entirely.¹⁵

§ 62. By Consent.—It is the well-established rule that a judgment or order will not be reviewed or disturbed on an appeal prosecuted by a party who consented to the making thereof.¹⁶ Hence, when the record discloses that the judgment or order was entered pro forma and by consent, it will dismiss the appeal on motion,¹⁷ or, in the absence thereof, it will affirm the judgment or order.¹⁸ A judgment by stipulation is one by consent within the rule;¹⁹ or consent may be implied from an acceptance of, or acquiescence in, the order or decree,²⁰ or by an acceptance of such benefits under the order or decree as is inconsistent with an exercise of the right to appeal therefrom.¹ The fact that the party gave assent reluctantly does not alter the case,² although doubtful cases should be construed in favor of the right of appeal.³ Where a judgment relates to two or more distinct matters, it has been held that consent to one portion constitutes a waiver of the right to appeal from that portion, though it does not preclude an appeal from other and independent parts of the judgment.⁴

Limitations on rule.—To preclude a review of an order on the ground of acquiescence, it must be clear that the party assented to the judgment or order appealed from, and that such consent was voluntary and absolute.⁵ Doubtful clauses in a judgment tending to show consent should be liberally construed in favor of the right of appeal. Hence it has been held that a recital in a judgment that no opposition was made thereto is not of itself sufficient to show the assent of the party, for he may have been absent from the courtroom, or he may have been present and merely passive. In neither case can it be said that he assented to the judgment.⁶ And in a case where a party excepts to the action of a court in striking out items from a complaint, though he agrees that, as the amount left is not within the jurisdictional limits of the court, the only consequence of its order is a dismissal of the action, it has been held that the judgment of dismissal is not one by consent.⁷ Of course, if it appears from the record that the consent was given only pro forma to facilitate an appeal and with the understanding on both sides that the party did not intend thereby to abandon his right to be heard on appeal in opposition to the judgment or order, he is not precluded from taking an appeal.⁸

§ 63. By Compliance With Judgment or Order.—It is well settled that a party cannot prosecute an appeal from a judgment or order after a voluntary compliance with it, as by a voluntary payment or satisfaction of record of a money judgment.⁹ The code provides that:

“An action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied.”¹⁰

When a judgment has been satisfied, it has passed beyond review, for the satisfaction thereof is the last act and end of the proceeding.¹¹ This code section cannot, however, be invoked to abridge the right of appeal where a judgment has been satisfied against the will of the appellant. And it is the established rule in this state that the enforced satisfaction of a judgment does not prevent the prosecution of an appeal therefrom by the defendant.¹² In like manner the right of appeal cannot be cut off by the action of the court in setting off one judgment against another.¹³ Even the voluntary payment of a judgment will not deprive a party of his right to appeal therefrom, unless the payment is by way of compromise, or with an agreement not to take or pursue an appeal.¹⁴ One against whom a judgment is rendered must expect to see his property seized and sold at a sacrifice if he fails to satisfy it. Indeed, payment under such circumstances might well be regarded as compulsory. Furthermore, the statute anticipates cases of this kind and provides that if the judgment appealed from is reversed, the appellate court may make or compel restitution.¹⁵

Compliance with mandate.—Under the rule stated above an appeal from a judgment awarding a writ of mandamus cannot be taken after a compliance by the party with the mandate of the court.¹⁶ And where a mandamus has been granted to compel a county auditor to issue his warrant for the amount of an allowed claim, his voluntary compliance with the mandate precludes the prosecution of an appeal by him or by the county on his behalf.¹⁷

§ 64. By Acceptance of Benefits.—It is a general rule that by the acceptance of the benefit of a decree a party waives all right of appeal therefrom. The right to accept the fruits of a judgment and the right to appeal therefrom are not concurrent, but are wholly inconsistent. An election to take one of these courses will be construed as a renunciation of the other.¹⁸ This rule proceeds upon the theory that acceptance of the fruits of a judgment is in effect the party's affirmance of the validity of the judgment against him.¹⁹ If a party to a judgment accepts payment or satisfaction of a part thereof which is favorable to him, and that part is of such a character that the part adverse to him cannot be reversed without affecting the part which is in his favor and requiring the reversal of that part also, the party so accepting the fruits of a part of the judgment in his favor is estopped from prosecuting an appeal from those parts which are against him.²⁰ And it has been held, where in a divorce action a decree is denied both parties but an award of alimony is made to the wife, that her acceptance of the payments of alimony awarded estops her from making a motion for a new trial for the purpose of having the judgment reviewed on appeal.¹

The rule and the principle are the same whether the judgment be the final determination of a cause or an intermediate order made in the course of the proceeding. A party cannot accept the benefit or advantage given by an order and then seek to have it reviewed.² Accordingly, where an order is made upon the condition of the payment of costs, an acceptance of such costs is a waiver of the right to appeal from the order.³

Limitation of rule.—A limitation of the rule above stated exists where a reversal of the judgment or order cannot affect the right of the appellant to the benefit secured, as when the only controversy relates to a greater sum. In such a case he is not precluded from an appeal, even though he has received the amount awarded to him.⁴

waive his right to appeal, as the order being conditional is not operative until the performance of the condition, and it would have been useless to appeal before that time). See *Wolff & Co. v. In accordance with these rules, a defendant cannot, after the acceptance of the costs awarded him, appeal from the judgment, where a reversal of the judgment would necessitate a new trial and vacate the judgment for costs, so that his ultimate right thereto would depend upon the result of the second trial. But where the relief sought on the appeal can be given by a modification of the erroneous portion of the judgment without disturbing the judgment, the appeal will be retained unless upon an examination of the merits it appears that a new trial must be ordered.⁵ It has been held, where a decree of foreclosure awards judgment for the defendant upon a counterclaim, that the plaintiff, by enforcing a sale of the mortgaged premises, does not estop himself from appealing from the part of the judgment against him.⁶

III. PARTIES.

§ 65. In General.—The code provides that—

“The party appealing is known as the appellant, and the adverse party as the respondent.”⁷

The term “adverse party” occurs also in the section of the code relating to the service of notice of appeal when the appeal is taken by the regular method. A discussion of who is an adverse party, will appear in that connection.⁸

St. Elmo Inv. Co., 94 Cal. 297, 29 Pac. 505 (where a judgment of foreclosure gives a mortgagee an absolute right to sell the mortgaged premises, the exercise of the right does not amount to a waiver of the right to appeal from that part of the decree fixing the personal liability for a deficiency); McCaleb v. McCaleb, 32 Cal. App. 648, 163 Pac. 1045.

Executors and administrators.—The reasons why an executor or administrator may not appeal from a decree of distribution are equally persuasive against his right to be heard, either voluntarily or involuntarily, as respondent, and also as to his being a necessary party to an appeal from a decree of distribution.⁹

Intervention.—While the code authorizes a person having the requisite interest to intervene before the trial of an action, there is no authority for such intervention after judgment and while a cause is pending on appeal. An execution creditor cannot, therefore, intervene in the supreme court and prevent a reversal of the judgment appealed from pursuant to stipulation of the parties.¹⁰

Effect of death or transfer of interest.—The effect of the death of a party or transfer of interest after judgment and pending appeal, and the method of substituting the representative or transferee, are elsewhere discussed,¹¹ except when authorized by statute under the following code provision:

“In the event of the death of any person having at his death a right of appeal the attorney of record representing the decedent in the court in which the judgment was rendered may appeal therefrom at any time before the appointment of an executor or administrator of the estate of the decedent.”¹²

§ 66. Joinder.—Inasmuch as the singular number includes the plural, the provision authorizing “any party aggrieved” to appeal may be read so as to authorize any number of parties claiming to be aggrieved to join in one appeal.¹³ They may join though their interests be several and distinct. Parties aggrieved by a decree of distribution, for example, may join as appellants even though, after reversal, they will upon the subsequent proceedings in the court below assert different and distinct interests in the property. That the decision on appeal may establish their rights thereto does not oblige them to take separate appeals.¹⁴ Moreover, the defendants to a cross-complaint may join in an appeal from a judgment against them, though in the action as originally brought they are on opposite sides of the case.¹⁵

There is no way or mode pointed out in our code for a plaintiff or defendant desiring to appeal to compel his co-defendant or coplaintiff to join him in the appeal. Neither is there any way to compel a severance, as under the old systems.¹⁶ The code allows any and every party to appeal without joining anyone else, no matter what may be the character of the judgment against him, whether joint or several. In this respect it works a change from the former practice.¹⁷ When, however, the defendants compose an official board, and as such, an integral body, it is required that an appeal from an adverse judgment must be on the part of all or none of

E. PRESENTING AND RESERVING OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT.

I. NECESSITY IN GENERAL.

§ 67. General Rule.—It is a well-established general rule that, with certain exceptions to be noted hereafter, an appellate court will consider only such objections as were raised in the trial court.²⁰ This rule precludes a party from asserting on appeal, claims to relief not asserted or asked for in the court below.¹ And it also prefense, it is not necessary that he should urge it in his argument in the court below in order that he may avail himself of it upon appeal, especially when the court finds favorably thereon. There is no rule which precludes a party from availing himself of every fact in issue found in his favor, and besides, the appellate court cannot ascertain from the record whether a defense was not urged in argument.⁵

Applications of rule.—Under the general rule above stated, an appellant cannot on appeal for the first time plead the following defenses: Want of capacity in the plaintiff to sue,⁶ laches,⁷ and the bar of the statute of limitations.⁸ And where a plaintiff is permitted to give proof of an agreement without objection that it was not in writing, it cannot be urged on appeal for the first time that the agreement is unenforceable because not in writing.⁹ Pursuant to the same rule it has been held that, as against an equitable suit to enjoin the execution of a judgment, it cannot be urged for the first time on appeal that the plaintiff's remedy is by motion in the action instead of by suit.¹⁰

§ 68. Adherence to Theory of Case.—It is well settled that the theory upon which a case is tried in the court below must be adhered to on appeal.¹¹ To permit a party who has tried his case wholly or in part on a certain theory, which theory was acted on by the trial court, to change his position and adopt a different theory on appeal, would not only be unfair to the trial court, but manifestly unjust to the opposing litigant.¹² And the reason of the rule is particularly applicable where the respondent insists in the lower court on trying the case on the theory contended for by the appellant on appeal,

Hopkins*, 174 Cal. 251, 255, 162 Pac. 1016 (an appellant cannot abandon the theory on which it began its action and demand a reversal upon the ground that the defendant did not plead, and the court did not find, with sufficient particularity the existence of the very conditions which the plaintiff asserted as the foundation of his rights); Tanforan v. Tanforan, 173 Cal. 270, 159 Pac. 709 (where a complainant seeks to have a deed set aside on the ground of duress and fraud, he cannot ask the appellate court to decide the question on the ground that the defendant exercised undue influence); *Blanc v. And cases cited infra.

but in pursuance of objections by him is overruled by the court. The appellant in such case will not be heard to say that the trial proceeded on an erroneous theory.¹³

The rule even extends to cases where the parties try their cause upon a particular theory as to what the law of the case is. For example: When an action is tried on the assumption acquiesced in by both sides, that a certain rule for the measure of damages is correct, the defeated party cannot on appeal urge that the standard by which the damages were assessed was not the correct one.¹⁴

Applications of rule generally.—By virtue of the general rule above stated, the parties must on appeal adhere to the construction placed by them upon their pleadings in the trial court.¹⁵ It has been held that a plaintiff who has treated a counterclaim or cross-complaint as having been properly filed, and has in effect waived his objection to its filing, cannot on appeal urge that the defendant had no right to file it.¹⁶ And where a defendant obtained a transfer of an action from the justice's to the superior court on the ground that the plaintiff's right depended upon the ownership of land, he will not be permitted to assert in the superior court, or on appeal therefrom, that such ownership was insufficient to establish his right.¹⁷ Other applications of the rule are noted in certain of the sections immediately following.¹⁸

13. Merrill v. Kohlberg, 29 Cal. App. 382, 155 Pac. 824 (where the defendant insisted that the trial should proceed on a certain theory of damages and on appeal urged that this was not the true measure of damages).

18. See infra, §§ 69-71.

§ 69. Adherence to Theory as to Issues Presented.—Under the general rules of law that the issues to be tried in an action are those presented by the pleadings and that the findings should be confined to facts in issue,¹⁹ where the parties have proceeded to trial upon a pleading without objection to its sufficiency to raise a particular issue, and evidence has been received as to the fact and the issue found upon, the party whose duty it was to object will not on appeal be heard to say that the finding is not within the issues.²⁰ Hence it has been repeatedly held in this state that where the trial court and the parties to an action proceed to a trial of the cause upon the theory that there is a material issue, and the court upon evidence addressed to that issue and received without objection finds in accordance with that evidence and upon the theory that an appropriate issue was raised by the pleadings, the parties will not, nor will either of them, be allowed on appeal for the first time to say there was no such issue.¹ The rule was recently stated by Mr. Justice Shaw in the following language:

are without the issues.³ And this is the rule also as to the findings.⁴

Reason for rule.—The principle on which these decisions rest is that of equitable estoppel, it being held that a party who acquiesces and participates in the trial of an issue without objection, as if it arose from the pleadings, when he might have objected on the ground that the issue was not made by the pleadings in the trial court, and where the objection might have been met by amendment of the pleadings or otherwise, so that it would have operated less injuriously on the other party than if first made on appeal, has thereby waived the objection, and, therefore, should not be heard to make it on appeal.⁵

Limitation of rule.—The rule above stated can have no application if the evidence as to matters outside the issues is relevant also to prove matters within the issues. In that event, no estoppel can arise from a failure to object thereto.⁶ Accordingly, the introduction of testimony tending to prove an admitted fact does not estop the party from claiming the benefit of the admission where the evidence is admissible also to prove disputed facts.⁷

§ 70. Application of Rule to Complaint Generally.—The rule just stated is frequently applied to complaints. A party cannot on appeal question the sufficiency of allegations where they were treated as sufficiently specific in the trial court.⁸ Neither will he be allowed, under such circumstances, to object on appeal to the sufficiency of a common count.⁹

If a complaint is uncertain in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the action was based on willful injury or negligence of the defendant, a defendant cannot complain of the defect on appeal, where the case was tried on the theory that the charge was negligence.¹⁰ So, also, where a complaint is treated as sufficient to authorize exemplary damages for trespass, notwithstanding the fact that it is demurrable for uncertainty or ambiguity because the facts authorizing such damages are alleged in general terms, an objection to its sufficiency cannot be raised on appeal for the first time.¹¹ In a case, where the plaintiff pleads one cause of action and recovers upon another, which is tried without objection, the same general principle applies.¹²

§ 71. Sufficiency of Complaint.—Where the trial proceeds in all respects as though the complaint sufficiently states a cause of action, and the defendant goes to trial upon the theory that there is a material issue, and allows evidence to be received upon such issue without objection in any way, and the court makes a finding upon such evidence, upon the theory that the proper issue is made by the pleadings, with no objection from either party, the parties will not, nor will either of them, be allowed on appeal to say, for the first time, there was no such issue.¹³

This is especially true where there is not a total absence of allegations essential to a statement of a cause of action.¹⁴

In case of a total absence of an essential allegation, the general rule seems to be that a defendant who has treated a complaint as sufficient, has made no objection to the admission of evidence of an omitted allegation and has allowed the issue to be tried as though properly presented by the pleadings, cannot on appeal urge that it is defective through some omission which could have been supplied by amendment at the time.¹⁵ However, there is some authority to the contrary in this point.¹⁶

James*, 89 Cal. 474, 477, 26 Pac. 1073 ("as there is no allegation in the complaint upon which such a finding can be supported, the defendant is not estopped by his conduct at the trial from claiming the benefit of the objection he now makes"); Cameron v. Ah Quong, 8 Cal. App. 310, 315, 96 Pac. 1025, where the court said: "The fact that the appellant failed to object to evidence addressed to issues not tendered by the pleadings can be of no service or avail to the respondent intervenor. It is well settled that where a complaint . . . entirely fails to state a cause of action, evidence offered and received, whether against or without objection, upon the theory, unsupported, or unfounded by the averments of the complaint, that the issues necessary to be determined are tendered and submitted by the pleadings, cannot cure the total absence of allegations essential to a statement of a cause of action. . . . If the rule were otherwise, . . . then certainly the rules of pleading would be absolutely worthless and count for naught." In this case, how-

In a very recent case the appellate court said:

“It seems to us that the reformed procedure would receive a decided shock if a defendant should be permitted to stand by and without objection allow issue to be tried as though properly presented by the pleadings and on appeal escape the consequences by claiming that the complaint failed to present such issue.”

And in denying a petition for rehearing, that court further said:

“Whatever answer to this question may be found in the decisions of our supreme and appellate courts, and it must be admitted that in some of them a negative answer finds support, we are satisfied that the rule should be as we have held.”¹⁷

Even where the complaint lacks the averment of a fact essential to a cause of action, it may, nevertheless, be so aided by the averment of the fact in the answer as to uphold a judgment thereon.¹⁸

Applications of rule.—Where the parties proceeded on the theory that the complaint was sufficient and the issue made, and no objection was made to the trial court to the evidence offered on the issue, the rule has been applied where the complaint on a contract contained no allegation of a consideration;¹⁹ or of nonpayment;²⁰ where, in an action of wrongful death, there was no allegaever, the evidence as to the omitted allegation was pertinent to the actual issues being tried, and could not have been objected to.

tion of the existence of heirs;¹ and where the copy of the note sued on contained neither a promise to pay nor the name of a payee.²

§ 72. Necessity for and Sufficiency of Objection—Reason for Rule.—To avoid the application of the rule stated in the preceding section, the defendant should make a specific objection to the testimony offered as inadmissible because the complaint does not state a cause of action. An objection upon the usual general grounds or upon the ground that a proper foundation has not been laid for it or that the questions designed to bring out the facts are leading, is insufficient to call the plaintiff's attention to the defect in his complaint.³ The necessity for objecting to the evidence is not excused by the fact that the defendant had interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, as such demurrer does not apprise the plaintiff of the defect in his pleading.⁴

Reason for rule.—The reason for the general rule above stated has been thus expressed:

“It is unfair for a party to withhold an objection founded upon a defect, which, if pointed out in time, might be remedied, until it is too late to correct the defect, thereby inducing an opponent to rely upon his pleading as sufficient in order that he may have a fatal objection. Such course is a fraud upon justice and prevents a fair trial. It is therefore not tolerated.”⁵

A leading authority has put the matter in this way:

“The general principle . . . appears to be that where there is any defect, imperfection, or omission in any pleading, whether in substance or form, which would have been a fatal objection upon demurrer, yet, if the issue joined be such as necessarily required on the trial, proof of the facts so defectively or imperfectly stated or omitted, and without which it is not to be presumed that either the judge would direct the jury to give, or the jury would have given, the verdict, such defect, imperfection, or omission is cured by verdict."⁶

§ 73. Rule as to Answer.—It is a general rule that where, notwithstanding the fact that the denials in an answer are not as broad as the allegations of the complaint or are otherwise insufficient to put the allegations of the complaint in issue, the answer is treated as putting the material facts in issue, the plaintiff cannot for the first time on appeal object that such denials were insufficient for any purpose.⁷ By virtue of this rule, it cannot be urged on appeal that there was no issue to be tried, where the allegations of the complaint are treated, as in issue, notwithstanding an order inadvertently striking out the defendant's allegations of denial.⁸ Similarly, an order striking out a defense is harmless, where, notwithstanding such order, the case is tried as though such defense were in issue.⁹ And in the case of affirmative defenses, where the parties on the trial treat a defense as sufficiently pleaded, it will be so treated on appeal,¹⁰ even though there may be an entire absence of an essential allegation.¹¹ It is immaterial in this respect whether the verdict is in favor of the plea and the plaintiff is appealing, or whether the verdict is against the plea and the plaintiff objects to a consideration of the errors because of the insufficiency of the plea.¹²

Again, where no answer is filed to an amended complaint, the plaintiff after going to trial as if there was a regular issue, and without making his objection known, cannot on appeal object to a want of answer to the amended complaint.¹³ And where, notwithstanding a failure of the plaintiff to file an answer to a cross-complaint, the parties treat its allegations as in issue and offer evidence touching the truth of its allegations, without objection, as though there had been a formal denial filed, the defendant cannot on appeal raise the question of want of answer.¹⁴ A defendant who treats his pleading as a counterclaim cannot on appeal assert that it is in fact a cross-complaint and that he is entitled to judgment on the pleadings for want of an answer thereto.¹⁵ And where, notwithstanding the sustaining of a demurrer to an answer, the allegations of a counterclaim are treated as still in issue, they will be so treated on appeal.¹⁶

partly upon a sort of estoppel, for where the objection is one which could, if made in the court below, have been obviated, it would be clearly unjust for a party to withhold his objection until upon appeal, when it is too late to correct the defect.¹⁸

Reasons for rule.—A party should not be allowed to speculate on the result of a trial, taking advantage of such result if in his favor and annulling it if adverse to him.¹⁹ And a further reason for requiring an objection is to give the trial court an opportunity to correct alleged errors.²⁰ But when the defect is one which cannot under any circumstances be obviated, the reason of the rule fails and with it the rule itself fails.¹

Objections not subject to waiver.—Questions of jurisdiction over the subject matter, and as to the sufficiency of the complaint upon the point whether the facts stated constitute a cause of action, are never waived in any case, and may be raised for the first time on appeal.² Indeed, the code after specifying the grounds of demurrer expressly provides as follows:

“If no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.”³

Hence, upon an objection which goes to the existence of the cause of action, and which is apparent on the face of the record, it has been held, where the record contains internal evidence that the document on which the defendant bases his defense is a forgery, that the objection may be raised for the first time on appeal.⁴ But objections to matters of procedure,⁵ or those which may be raised by special demurrer,⁶ mere irregularities, and the like, can be obviated, and must therefore be raised in the trial court or the objection will be deemed waived.⁷

isdiction over the person of the defendant is waived by a general appearance of the defendant without reservation and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal,⁸ it is equally well established that an objection to the jurisdiction of a court over the subject matter of a suit cannot be obviated and may be presented on appeal for the first time.⁹ And this rule extends to the want of jurisdiction in other tribunals besides courts, such, for example, as boards of supervisors.¹⁰ When, however, a trial court has general jurisdiction of the subject matter and its jurisdiction over a particular case depends upon an adjudication of certain facts upon the existence of which its jurisdiction depends, the finding of the trial court as to such facts will not be reviewed upon appeal at the instance of a party who appeared therein and omitted to urge his objection, but proceeded upon the theory that the court had jurisdiction.¹¹ This rule precludes a will contestant who without objection submitted his contest to the court below, from raising the question for the first time on appeal that the deceased was a nonresident of the county,¹² or from urging defects in the notice of hearings, where the record does not affirmatively show that notice was not given.¹³

Manner of obtaining jurisdiction.—Where an appeal to the superior court is tried without raising the objection that the cause is not within its appellate jurisdiction, and should have been certified thereto instead of appealed, the objection cannot be raised for the first time on appeal from the judgment of the superior court. That court has original jurisdiction of the case, and the objection goes to the manner in which jurisdiction is obtained rather than the jurisdiction of the court.¹⁴

Equity and probate jurisdiction of superior courts.—While it is true that in California the probate and equity jurisdictions of the superior court are distinct, it is also true that the same tribunal exercises both jurisdictions. When, therefore, a petition for equitable relief is filed in the probate division of the court, it may be regarded as a bill in equity, and it cannot be objected for the first time on appeal that the petition is wrongly entitled.¹⁵ Conversely, it seems that a court of equity is not without jurisdiction of a suit to determine who is entitled to distribution of an estate, and where the parties treat a suit in equity for that purpose as properly before the court, the appellate court will so treat it.¹⁶

Misjoinder.—The objection that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff cannot be urged for the first time on appeal.² The same is true of an objection to a defect or nonjoinder of parties. If the defendant's rights would be injuriously affected by reason of the absence of other necessary parties, it is his duty appropriately to call the court's attention to this fact with a request that they be brought in.³

§ 77. Pleadings Generally.—In accordance with the general rule already stated, it is well settled that objections to defects of form in a pleading which might have been cured by amendment in the court below cannot be urged for the first time upon appeal.⁴ In other words, a party cannot for the first time on appeal raise objections which are the subject of special demurrer,⁵ or which are cured by verdict.⁶

In order that such defects may be considered on appeal, the party must make specific objection thereto in the trial court. And if he objects on certain grounds, he cannot on appeal raise other objections to the complaint, which might have been obviated by timely amendment; as by pointing out particular objections he has in effect assured the adverse party that he will urge no other objection.⁷

or that a defense is not alleged with sufficient particularity;⁵ or that there has been a withdrawal of a special defense by the defendant.⁶

§ 78. Failure to State Cause of Action or Defense.—It is a general rule that the objection that the complaint does not state a cause of action may be raised for the first time on appeal.⁷ This rule applies where there are several counts and some of them are insufficient to state a cause of action,⁸ unless the right to relief on the insufficient causes of action is abandoned and no judgment is rendered against the defendant thereon. In the latter case, the defendant will not on appeal be heard to complain that the complaint does not state facts entitling the plaintiff to relief prayed for but not granted.⁹ Likewise, where an answer is so deficient in its averments that it does not even attempt to state a defense, the point may be raised for the first time on appeal.¹⁰ The courts are not inclined to look favorably upon objections to pleadings specifically made for the first time on appeal, where upon suggestion before trial, the defect could have been easily overcome.¹¹ And they will in aid of the judgment, therefore, give the complaint as favorable an interpretation as its general scope will permit.¹²

While it has never been held that a defendant cannot raise the objection for the first time on appeal that there is an entire absence of both a direct and implied allegation of a material fact,¹³ unless, as has been shown, the parties have treated the pleading as containing such allegation and tried the case upon the theory that a proper issue was made thereon by the pleadings,¹⁴ a complaint will be held sufficient against such an objection where the facts essential to the cause of action appear by reasonable implication.¹⁵ Thus, an allegation made in the form of a legal conclusion implies the necessary material facts and is sufficient against such an objection.¹⁶ So, also, in an action based upon fraud, an allegation that statements were made falsely and fraudulently raises an implication that they were untrue, and that the defendant knew them to be untrue, or made them in a manner not warranted by his own information, although he believed them to be true, so as to preclude him from objecting to the insufficiency of the cause of action.¹⁷ In like manner, it has been held that an allegation that the plaintiff acted on the representation raises an inference that the plaintiff relied thereon and believed in the truth of the representation.¹⁸

§ 79. Limitation of Rule.—The rule stated in the preceding section is subject to an exception or at least to a limitation where the objection is directed at the failure to plead matters which go to the plaintiff's right to maintain his action at the time and which are in nature and effect matter in abatement, but which under our system are required to be set out in the complaint. For example, while it is well settled that a complaint against an estate sounding in contract fails to state a cause of action, and is subject to general demurrer if it does not allege a prior presentation of the claim sued on to the administrator, it is equally well settled that this objection cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, but must first be presented in some manner in the trial court.¹⁹ The merits of a claim do not depend in any degree upon its presentation and rejection before suit. The defense that a claim has not been presented or rejected before suit does not question either its validity or maturity, but simply challenges the remedy by suit on the ground that another remedy has priority and should be exhausted before suit. For these reasons this defense is in its nature and effect a defense in abatement and is presumed to be waived if not expressly made in the court of original jurisdiction.²⁰ Under the rule that the objection must be specific, it has been held that a general objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that no proper foundation has been laid for the suit, or the cause of action, or for the introduction of the evidence, is not sufficiently specific to call the attention of the plaintiff to the point relied on.¹

§ 80. Signature and Verification.—While there is some authority in other jurisdictions to the effect that an unsigned pleading is a nullity, the weight of authority is to the effect that the omission of the signature to a pleading is but an irregularity that does not affect the jurisdiction of the court and may be cured by amendment. The latter rule obtains in California,² and therefore it follows that an objection to a want of signature cannot be urged for the first time on appeal.³

Verification.—Technical objections to the verification cannot be urged for the first time on appeal. For example, it cannot be first urged on appeal that the verification is not authenticated by a notarial seal, that there is no venue to the affidavit, that there is no evidence that the officer was a notary, or that the affidavit does not show that it was made at any particular place.⁴ The parties may even waive the verification entirely. A defendant cannot object for the first time on appeal that the petition for a writ of mandate was not verified as required by the code.⁵ Nor, on the other hand, can the plaintiff, after a trial upon the merits without objection, raise the objection for the first time on appeal that the answer to his verified complaint was unverified. By proceeding to trial without objection, he is deemed to have waived the defect.⁶

§ 81. Amendment.—A party cannot raise, for the first time on appeal, the question whether the trial court erred in allowing a pleading to be amended;⁷ or object that an amended complaint was filed without previous leave of court,⁸ or that it sets up a new cause of action,⁹ or effects a change of parties in the action.¹⁰ Moreover, a defendant cannot object for the first time on appeal that a copy of an amendment to the complaint was not served upon him where evidence as to the matters embraced therein was introduced without objection.¹¹

Under the rules applicable to amendments of pleadings,¹² it has been held that where the transcript shows simply that an order was made sustaining the demurrer without leave to plaintiff to amend, and that thereafter a judgment was given dismissing the action, and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff ever asked leave or desired to amend, it is the settled rule in this state that it is too late to make the point for the first time in the supreme court, that the trial court refused leave to amend. In such case the record must affirmatively show an abuse of discretion on the part of the lower court.¹³

It is provided by the code that "any pleading may be amended once by the party of course, and without costs, at any time before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer and before the trial of the issue of law thereon, by filing the same as amended and serving a copy on the adverse party" (Code Civ. Proc., § 472, in part). After trial of the issue of law raised by demurrer, however, the privilege of amending is not one of right, but rests in the discretion of the trial court. *Schaake v. A mere objection to the testimony may not be alone sufficient to preserve the right of the objecting party to have the question so presented reviewed.¹⁶ The party offering evidence is entitled to have the particular portion of the evidence objected to pointed out, and the specific ground of the objection stated, in order that he may obviate the objection or waive the testimony, if he is unwilling to take the risk of error. It is not permissible, when a witness takes the stand, to object generally to all the testimony he will give, then go through an examination without further objection, and if it should turn out that a few lines of it are improper testimony, claim that the judgment should be reversed on that ground.¹⁷

Time of objection.—When a question is improper, the objection should be made before the answer to the question is given, if possible. A party will not be permitted to speculate on the favorableness of an answer, and then if the answer is unfavorable, move to strike it out. If there is an opportunity to object, and no objection be made, a motion to strike out evidence is not available to a party against whom the evidence is introduced.¹⁸ When the question propounded to a witness shows upon its face that the testimony called for is necessarily inadmissible, the rights of the party are fully preserved by his objection to the proposed evidence, and his exception to the ruling admitting it. It is not necessary in such case, in order to save the point, to move to strike out the testimony after it is admitted.¹⁹ But if it is not apparent from the question itself that the response thereto will, upon any theory of the case, be inadmissible and the inadmissible evidence is for the first time disclosed by the answer of the witness, it is necessary to move to strike it out when its inadmissibility appears, if an objection thereto is to be availed of on appeal.²⁰ And a party against whom evidence is admitted should move to strike it out when it is volunteered by a witness,¹ as where the witness answers so quickly that counsel has no opportunity to interpose an objection.²

Renewal of objection.—Where a party has once made a proper objection and reserved an exception to a certain line or character of evidence, he is not required to renew the objection at each recurrence of the objectionable matter arising upon the examination of other witnesses.³

Likewise, where after an objection to a question, similar questions differing only in phraseology are put, it is not necessary to renew the objection.⁴

§ 83. Evidence Admitted Subject to Objection or Motion. Parties cannot absolve themselves from the necessity of objecting to the evidence by consenting in advance to admit it subject to all legal objections or exceptions. They cannot in this manner place upon the trial court the responsibility of discovering whatever objections might exist to the evidence offered, and then, after fishing for a verdict below, for the first time on appeal assign objections and charge the trial court with error in failing to sustain an unspoken objection.⁵ This rule is applicable as well where the parties agree on the facts. If the agreed statement is admitted in evidence without objection, neither party can raise the point on appeal that some of the facts were not admissible under the pleadings, even though they stipulated that the facts were admitted "subject to all legal objections."⁶

Admission subject to motion to strike out.—When evidence is admitted by the court subject to a motion to be thereafter made to strike it out, the party must move to strike it out if he wishes to raise the question upon appeal. If he fails to do so, he will be deemed to have acquiesced in the evidence remaining before the jury.⁷

subject to the objection and without a ruling thereon, is not, except under very exceptional circumstances, to be commended. And where such a course is followed, a ruling should be made prior to the conclusion of the trial and in time to enable the party to present his case in the light of such ruling.⁸

§ 84. Application of Rule to Objection to Evidence.— In accordance with the rule requiring one to object to the introduction of evidence, a party who permits a fact to be proved by incompetent evidence without objection, waives all question of admissibility.⁹ He cannot, for example, object for the first time on appeal that his adversary proved his case by secondary evidence.¹⁰ To permit secondary evidence to go in without objecting thereto, and afterward, on appeal, to make the objection for the first time, is a practice which, if tolerated, would work a gross injustice and a manifest surprise upon the opposite party.¹¹ This rule is true even under the statute of frauds. If a contract required to be in writing is in fact verbal, objection must be taken to the character of the proof offered to establish it, if the question is to be reviewed on appeal.¹² Other instances illustrative of the

the form of questions put by counsel;⁵ or that hypothetical questions put to an expert witness are not based upon hypothesis consistent with the facts shown in the case;⁶ or that the wording of a question placed certain facts before the jury, where counsel did not at the time ask the court to admonish the jury to disregard the implication of the question.⁷

§ 85. Specifying Grounds of Objection to Evidence.— While a trial court may sustain an objection or sustain a motion to strike out evidence upon any sufficient ground, although not specified by the party in whose favor the ruling is made, it is not required to do so.⁸ Substantial justice requires that a party objecting to the admission of evidence should specify the particular ground of his objection, so that the party offering the testimony can meet the objection if possible, and let the case be tried on its merits.⁹ Figuratively speaking, he must lay his finger on the point at the time,¹⁰ unless the offered evidence be absolutely or manifestly incompetent.¹¹ And the rule obtains most particularly where the vice is a latent one. Hence, an appellate court will not, as a general rule, consider objections to the admission of evidence unless the ground of the objection is pointed out in definite and unequivocal language.¹²

The general rule above set forth is equally applicable to motions to strike out evidence. The moving party must specify his objection with the same particularity that is required in pointing out an objection to a question. And, in like manner, if his motion is denied, he cannot on appeal urge other reasons not specified in the trial court why the motion should have been granted.¹⁴

§ 86. General Objection to Evidence.—It has often been held that a general objection to evidence as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, nothing more being stated, is too general to be considered on appeal, if, in any possible circumstances, the admitted testimony can be deemed competent, relevant or material.¹⁵ The appellant should point out the particular defect which rendered the question either incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial, that the objection could have been intelligently ruled upon, and, if necessary or proper, obviated;¹⁶ a merely formal objection is not sufficient.¹⁷ And in such case, the particular objection limits the general words, so that on appeal, in accordance with the rule already stated, objections not specified will not be considered by the appellate court.¹⁸

Upon the same principle, the appellate court will not consider objections in general terms that evidence is inadmissible,¹⁹ or irrelevant,²⁰ or incompetent,¹ unless the evidence is inadmissible for any purpose and the difficulty cannot be obviated.²

Limitation of rule.—There is a well-established limitation to the general rule above stated, where the offered evidence is absolutely irrelevant and incompetent for any purpose and the objection cannot be obviated even if it is stated. In such case, the question being objectionable from every standpoint, the court is not aided in making an intelligent ruling by a specific objection, and a general objection will not suffice. The reason of the rule failing, the rule itself fails.³ More especial objections are required in certain cases, as where the question is formally defective, or the proper foundation has not been laid, or where, if the objection had been more specific, the other party might have obviated the difficulty by changing the form of the question, or by introducing other evidence, or by amending the complaint. But where the objection cannot be met no matter how specific, a specific objection is not necessary.⁴

As to hypothetical questions.—The same is true of the objection that a question is not a proper hypothetical question. Such an objection may refer to one of very many supposed reasons why the question was deemed proper.⁵ An objection that a hypothetical question assumes the existence of conditions not shown by the evidence should point out the matter not pertinent to the case or which was not shown to be true.⁶

As to depositions.—A general objection to a deposition reaches the relevancy, competency or legal effect of the testimony only. Objections to matters of form and to questions of regularity or authority in respect of taking a deposition must be specific.⁷ And so it has been held that an objection that "no legal proceedings have been taken, that a deposition is without authority of law and is inadmissible, irrelevant and immaterial," is too general to raise the question as to irregularity in not naming a special commissioner.⁸

§ 87. Exclusion of Evidence and Offer.—It is a well-established rule that a party objecting to the admission of evidence must point out the particular reason why the proffered evidence is inadmissible, and that if his objection is overruled, he cannot on appeal urge other grounds why the evidence is inadmissible.⁹ But a different rule obtains where the objection is sustained and the objecting party seeks to uphold the ruling on appeal. He is at liberty to suggest any ground that he may choose to show that the ruling of the trial court was correct, whether advanced in the discussions below or not.¹⁰ The fact that a party has made an improper or insufficient objection in the court below does not preclude or estop him in the appellate court from justifying a ruling in his favor upon any other ground.¹¹ As the trial court need not wait for an objection, but may exclude evidence on its own motion, it follows that although the objection of the party may be improper or insufficient, the ruling of the court excluding the evidence will be upheld if there appears any reason for which the evidence should have been excluded, and which could not have been obviated on being stated.¹² If, however, the objection to the evidence might have been obviated if the ground of objection were pointed out, it is error for the court to sustain an objection made on an improper ground.¹³

Offer of proof and purpose of offer.—It often happens that the pertinence of a question is not obvious from its terms; in other words, it appears to be irrelevant until explained by counsel. In such case, the party seeking to introduce the evidence must, in order to present the question to the appellate court, make an offer of what he expects to prove, so that the court below and the appellate court can determine whether or not the proposed proof is material and pertinent. In the absence of such an offer, there will be nothing in the record on appeal to show the pertinency of the proposed testimony, or whether the party was prejudiced by the ruling. Non constat but that the evidence may have been wholly immaterial or irrelevant.¹⁴

Renewal of offer.—Where evidence is correctly excluded because not within the issues made by the pleadings, and the party obtains leave to amend his pleading so as to permit the evidence offered to be introduced, he must renew his attempt to get the evidence before the court, if he wishes to complain on appeal of the exclusion of the evidence.¹⁵

§ 88. Dismissal and Nonsuit.—The same consideration upon which it is required that a party objecting to the introduction of testimony should state precisely the grounds of his objection, is applicable where a motion for nonsuit is made at the trial. The defendant must call the attention of the plaintiff to the defect in his proof, so that he may obviate the objection by additional evidence, if he can;¹⁶ or, in the event the nonsuit be ordered, that the ruling may afford a true and definite basis for the settlement of a bill of exceptions, and record for review.¹⁷ Hence, it is the general rule, that an appellate court will not review a ruling of the trial court denying a motion for a nonsuit upon any ground not precisely and specifically stated in the motion;¹⁸ and if no ground is sufficiently stated, it will not review it at all;¹⁹ for where a motion for nonsuit is made without stating the grounds upon which it is made, it is not error to overrule the motion.²⁰ By moving for a nonsuit on stated grounds, a defendant thereby impliedly waives all others, and if his motion is denied, he cannot on appeal argue that the motion should have been granted on some ground not specified.¹

Where motion is granted.—The rule seems to be established that the respondent cannot on appeal urge other grounds not pointed out below in support of an order granting a nonsuit, but that the appellate court will consider only the grounds specified in the motion, and will set aside the order if it finds none of them well taken. It has been held that this is the rule, although other grounds appearing in the record, but not specified in the motion, might have warranted the order.² There are, however, certain decisions and dicta to the effect that an order granting a nonsuit may be sustained even upon grounds not stated in the motion.³ It has been said that

Brown*, 126 Cal. 160, 162, 58 Pac. 466 (where the court says by way of dictum: "Of course, if the record showed any other valid ground for the nonsuit, the order granting it would be maintained here, although such ground was not stated in the motion for nonsuit; but no such other ground appears"); Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 410, 25 Pac. 487 (upholding a judgment of nonsuit though the record does not show the grounds upon which the motion was made or that any grounds were assigned. The evidence of the plaintiff was, however, entirely insufficient to put the defendant on his proof, and it seems that it is on this ground rather than the former that the majority of the court concurred); Bailey v. Brown, 4 Cal. App. 515, 88 Pac. 518 (citing Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 410, 25 Pac. 487, and Davey

it would be obviously unjust to the plaintiff in such cases to permit the defendant who has moved for a nonsuit upon insufficient grounds to urge in support of the order of nonsuit objections which might have been obviated if pointed out at the time the motion was made.⁴

Where reason of rule does not apply.—Since the reason of the rule is to afford an opportunity to correct such defects as admit of correction, it is plain that this reason, and therefore the rule itself, does not apply where the defects do not admit of correction, as where the defect is inherent in the cause of action. In other words, in such a case the error in granting the motion where the defects are not specified is immaterial.⁵ Again, when a party resists a motion to dismiss on certain grounds, he cannot on appeal from an order granting the motion urge other reasons why the motion should have been denied. The trial court may properly assume that the grounds urged before it are the only grounds upon which the motion is opposed, and act accordingly.⁶

§ 89. Variance and Trial.—The general rule requiring objections to be made in the trial court as a prerequisite to review on appeal, applies to the question of variance and the proceedings at the trial. Where the findings and judgment are supported by the evidence and it appears that the case was decided correctly on the merits, objections to a variance between the complaint and the proof which might have been obviated by an amendment of the complaint cannot be urged for the first time on appeal.⁷ And this is true even though the variance is of a substantial nature.⁸ An objection to evidence on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial in that it does not support the allegation of the complaint is not sufficient to raise the question of variance.⁹

Questions relating to conduct of trial.—A party cannot object for the first time on appeal that an action at law was not tried by a jury;¹⁰ or, on the other hand, that an action or cause of action not triable by jury was so tried.¹¹ Respecting omissions to give instructions, an ap-

The party desiring to have an instruction more specific should request an instruction on that point.¹⁴

Mere irregularities, unobjected to on the trial, cannot avail on appeal. Hence, it has been held, that while equitable defenses interposed in an action at law should be first passed upon by the court, any irregularity in submitting them to the jury with the legal defenses cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal.¹⁵ And, for like reason, the objection that a portion of the testimony was re-read before the retirement of the jury cannot be urged for the first time on appeal.¹⁶

§ 90. Misconduct.—As the effect of misconduct of counsel can ordinarily be removed by an instruction to the jury to disregard it, it is essential, in order that such act be reviewed on appeal, that it shall first be called to the attention of the trial court at the time, to give that court an opportunity to so act in the premises as, if possible, to avoid the error and prevent a mistrial. It is insufficient merely to “except” to the improper remarks of counsel;¹⁷ the party should ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard the supposed misconduct.¹⁸ Where the action of the court is not thus invoked, the alleged misconduct will not be considered on appeal, if an admonition to the jury would remove the effect thereof.¹⁹

• On the same principle, a party cannot object for the first time on appeal to remarks of the trial judge;²⁰ or to his temporary absence from the courtroom;¹ or to the misconduct of a witness, of such a nature that all prejudicial effect can be obviated by a proper instruction and admonition to the jury.²

Misconduct of the jury known to a party at the time of its occurrence cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal. A party cannot remain quiet and take the chance of a favorable verdict, and then, if the verdict is unfavorable, raise the objection on appeal.³

§ 91. Findings, Verdict and Report of Referee.—If the verdict returned is informal, it is the duty of the aggrieved party to point out the defect before the verdict is received and recorded. If he fails to do so, it is only just that he should be precluded from complaining on appeal of the form of the verdict.⁴ As a general rule, a party will not be heard to object to a verdict for the first time on appeal from the judgment, if it is susceptible of a construction which may have a lawful and relevant effect.⁵ Hence, a party cannot object for the first time on appeal as to the form of special interrogatories to the jury;⁶ or that the answers of the jury to special issues submitted to them are indefinite and not sufficiently specific;⁷ or where, not having requested that forms of verdict be given to the jury, that the court did not do so;⁸ or that a verdict was not declared by the foreman, or, in the case of a sealed verdict, read by the clerk, before it was recorded.⁹

A verdict may, however, be so defective as to be subject to subsequent attack, although no objection be made at the time of its rendition. If there is no finding at all upon an issue, it is no verdict at all as to such issue. The failure of the plaintiff to call for a correction of the verdict in such a case does not raise a presumption that the issue had been abandoned on the trial.¹⁰

Findings.—Similar rules apply to the findings of the court. A party cannot object for the first time on appeal to defects of form in the findings, and will not, therefore, be heard to urge that a finding is in reality a conclusion of law;¹¹ or that the findings are not sufficiently explicit;¹² or that there is a conflict in the findings.¹³ And, as has already been seen, where the parties treat certain matters as within the issues and proceed to trial upon that theory, they will not be permitted to urge that a finding thereon is outside the issues made by the pleadings.¹⁴

Since it is the duty of the court to find upon all the material issues, regardless of any request of the parties, and a failure in that respect is a ground of new trial to the party aggrieved as a decision against law,¹⁵ it has been held that a failure to object to evidence, or to move for a nonsuit, or to request specific findings, does not pre-

Under the procedure prior to the adoption of the code, it was the rule that no judgment should be reversed on appeal for want of a finding at the instance of any party who, at the time of the submission of the cause, had not requested a finding in writing, and had such request entered in the minutes of the court. clude an appellant from attacking a finding on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it.¹⁶

References.—A party cannot object to a referee's report for the first time on appeal. The report of a referee should be taken advantage of in the trial court by filing written objections to the entry of judgment thereon or by a motion for a new trial setting forth the grounds of the alleged error.¹⁷ Where a reference to ascertain a fact to enable the court to determine an action or proceeding is had, the objection should be raised before the court approves, and adopts the finding of that officer into its own findings. In the absence of such an objection, it will be assumed that there was no error.¹⁸

§ 92. Judgment, Execution and Costs.—Clerical errors in the judgment should be corrected in the trial court on motion to correct the error, instead of raising the point for the first time on appeal.¹⁹ It has been held, though, that in a case where the error in the computation of interest is apparent upon the record, the appellate court has authority to correct it in the judgment; but an appeal for this cause alone is trivial, and where this is the only point raised, the court will award damages for a frivolous appeal.²⁰

45, 48, where, under the early practice, it was held (Hastings, C. J., dissenting), that though, according to strict practice, a motion in the court below to set aside the report of the referee is necessary before a cause can be taken to an appellate court, a failure to make such a motion is but a defect, error or imperfection not affecting the merits, which the court, under the statute, is authorized to overlook.

One may appeal from a default judgment rendered against him upon defective service without moving to set aside the default or other proceedings in the court below.¹ So, also, where an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint contains an order refusing leave to amend, the order is deemed excepted to, and it is not necessary for the plaintiff to move to vacate or modify it in order to have the point reviewed on appeal whether or not the court abused its discretion.²

Grounds for staying execution of a judgment, other than the taking of an appeal, cannot be urged upon motion in the appellate court, but should first be presented in the trial court, and brought to the appellate court, if at all, upon appeal from the order of the trial court.³

Vacation of judgment not supported by conclusions of law.—In order to raise the question on appeal whether certain conclusions of law are supported by the findings, a party may proceed under the provisions of sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and move for a vacation of the judgment rendered and for a correction of the conclusions of law and entry of the proper judgment.⁴ If aggrieved, he may appeal from the order denying his motion.⁵ This remedy is not exclusive, however, and does not affect or supersede the remedy by appeal from the final judgment, for it is well settled that the question as to the inconsistency between the findings and judgment may be reviewed upon such appeal.⁶

Writs, orders of sale, etc.—It has been held that a party cannot for the first time on appeal object to the issuance of a writ of assistance, on the ground that the amount in the judgment was left blank, as such objection could have been obviated by an amendment nunc pro tunc, had objection been made below.⁷ And it seems that any irregularity in the fact that an order of sale of mortgaged premises addressed to the sheriff is executed by a commissioner must be raised by motion to vacate the sale, and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.⁸ Where, in an order of sale, the record contains all the data necessary to correct the error, it is said that there is no necessity for an appeal to correct such error, at least until after a denial of a motion for that purpose by the trial court.⁹

Costs.—Questions relating to the taxation of costs cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. The party complaining must move in the trial court to retax, and thus obtain distinctly the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction upon the disputed items before resort can be had to a higher tribunal.¹⁰

§ 93. Orders on Motion for a New Trial.—Where a motion for a new trial is granted and the record on appeal does not show that any objection was made in the court below, the appellant cannot urge for the first time on appeal that the notice of motion was defective in not setting forth the grounds of the motion. If the objection had been made, the court may have allowed an amendment, or the parties may have waived the objection. Error will not be presumed and the burden is on the appellant to show error by the record.¹¹

When the right to extend the time in which to give notice of intention existed, the parties could not raise the objection for the first time on appeal that the notice was served too late.¹² So, also, under the former practice, a failure of the adverse party to interpose objections to the proposed statement, or to the hearing of the motion and the proposal of amendments without objection, constituted a waiver of defects in the proceedings precluding the respondent from urging them as reasons for affirming an order denying the motion, or for disregarding the statement.¹³ This rule was held applicable also where the motion was heard on a bill of exceptions,¹⁴ although there is authority to the contrary.¹⁵ And where a bill of

It is enough that it is pointed out as an objection upon which the party intends to rely in resisting the motion.¹⁷

When there was a failure to serve an adverse party who did not participate in the hearing, the rule is that since the failure to serve all parties to the issue involves a jurisdictional defect, the objection is available at any time and in any court in which the cause may be pending.¹⁸

Rule applied.—Other instances where the rule that a party cannot object for the first time on appeal has been held applicable, include the following: That certain matters were improperly presented by affidavit;¹⁹ that the bill of exceptions was not filed in time;²⁰ that no notice of the settlement was given;¹ or that the notice of motion for a new trial was improperly served on an associate counsel.²

§ 94. Necessity of Ruling on Objection.—Not only is it necessary that the party object, but it is also necessary that it appear that the objection was ruled on by the court.³ If no ruling upon an objection is shown, the inference arises that it was withdrawn, and there is nothing to be reviewed.⁴

Ruling on demurrer.—If a demurrer is interposed, it is the duty of the demurrant to see that it is ruled on. If he fails to call the court's attention to it in any way, and allows the case to be tried without a ruling thereon, he is deemed to have waived his demurrer.⁵ If the demurrer is not ruled upon, the appellate court will not consider an objection to evidence,⁶ or an offer of evidence.⁷ The ruling need not necessarily be a formal one. There is a sufficient ruling where on an objection to evidence the court states the issue to be tried, and counsel refrains from introducing further evidence along the lines excluded by the court.⁸ The code provides that an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer is deemed to have been excepted to.⁹

III. EXCEPTIONS.

§ 95. In General.—An exception is defined by the code to be

“An objection upon a matter of law to a decision made, either before or after judgment, by a court, tribunal, judge, or other judicial officer, in an action or proceeding.”¹⁰

It is a formal protest against the ruling of the court upon a question of law,¹¹ and apprises the trial court that its ruling is challenged, and thereby enables it to reconsider its ruling and correct the error, if it be such.¹²

The office of a ruling is to cause the question of law, which was presented to and decided by the court or other tribunal, to be made a matter of record, so that it may be re-examined by the court upon a motion for a new trial or be reviewed by the appellate court.¹³ Therefore, in order that errors be reviewed upon appeal, it is not sufficient merely to interpose an objection and obtain a ruling thereon; it is also necessary to take an exception to the ruling,¹⁴ at the time the decision is

As has been intimated, the exception when taken is to the decision or ruling of the trial court or other judicial officer. A party cannot except to testimony introduced, but only to the ruling of the court upon an objection to its admissibility.¹⁹

When exceptions to rulings of referee are to be taken.—The code provides that the findings of a referee or commissioner may be excepted to and reviewed in like manner as if made by the court;²⁰ and there was a similar provision in the Practice Act.¹ The clear meaning of this, says an early case, is that exceptions must be taken to the rulings of the referee during the progress of the trial in the same manner as they are taken before a court; and then such exceptions must be embodied in the report of the referee, or made a part of his report by being properly certified to him.²

§ 96. Rule as to Rulings Deemed Excepted to.—The Practice Act did not, as does our code, contain an enumeration of orders which were deemed excepted to. But even under that act it was settled that an exception was not necessary where the error in question appeared on the record. This purpose of an exception being to cause the question of law presented to the court to be made a matter of record, no useful purpose would be subserved by making the ruling a matter of record a second time by exception, if it already appeared of record, and was reviewable without a bill of exceptions or state-

Cal. 50. See Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353, holding when the referee excludes proper testimony or admits improper evidence, or does any other act materially affecting the rights of either party during the progress of the trial before him, then such party should except, and see that the exception is truly stated in the report.

ment.³ The code dispenses with the necessity of taking exceptions in a number of cases by specifying certain rulings deemed excepted to. The provision reads as follows:

"The verdict of the jury, the final decision in an action or proceeding, an interlocutory order or decision, finally determining the rights of the parties, or some of them, an order or decision from which an appeal may be taken, an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer, allowing or refusing to allow an amendment to a pleading, striking out a pleading or a portion thereof, refusing a continuance, an order made upon ex parte application, giving an instruction, although no objection to such instruction was made, refusing to give an instruction, modifying an instruction requested, an order or decision made in the absence of the party, or an order granting or denying a nonsuit, or a motion to strike out evidence or testimony and a ruling sustaining or overruling an objection to evidence, are deemed to have been excepted to."⁴

It is well settled that the necessity for taking an exception is determined by the law in existence at the time of the trial, and not at the time of the appeal. If a case is tried while there is a statute requiring exceptions to be taken, the subsequent repeal of the statute does not authorize the review on appeal of objections or errors not excepted to at the trial.⁵

Particular rulings.—Because they are not included in the enumeration in the code of rulings deemed excepted to, exceptions must be taken to such orders as the following to permit of a review on appeal: An order substituting parties;⁶ or denying a motion to be permitted to inter-

§ 97. Pleadings, Evidence and Nonsuit.—Though the code provides that an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer is deemed to have been excepted to, such ruling is usually entered of record, and in accordance with the rule already stated, no exception is necessary even in the absence of statute.¹⁵ No exception need be taken either to an order allowing an amendment to a pleading,¹⁶ or refusing to allow such an amendment.¹⁷ But an order refusing to allow the plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint is not an order refusing to allow an amendment to the pleading within the meaning of the code, and must

Such order must therefore be excepted to,²⁰ except when made in the absence of the complaining party, when it would be embraced within the provision relating to ex parte orders.¹

As to evidence.—Though the rule was otherwise both under the Practice Act and under the code prior to the year 1909, it is now provided that an order is deemed excepted to which grants or denies a motion to strike out evidence or testimony,² which sustains an objection to evidence,³ or which overrules such an objection.⁴

As to nonsuit.—Formerly, the improper granting of a nonsuit was reviewable only where an exception was entered at the time of the ruling and specified in the motion as a ground for a new trial, or upon appeal from a judgment based upon a bill of exceptions showing that such exception was taken at the time the order was made.⁵ But now under the code, orders deemed excepted to include orders granting,⁶ and orders denying a nonsuit.⁷ The code does not, however, give an exception to a refusal to pass upon a motion to dismiss.⁸

was not specifically provided that a final decision was deemed excepted to, the practice was uniform that an exception was not required.¹⁴

Under the code provision that "the verdict of the jury or the final decision of the court or referee" were deemed excepted to, it has been held that the word "decision" in this connection, placed as it is in apposition to the word "verdict," is manifestly intended to apply to the findings of fact.¹⁵ The phrase "final decision in an action or proceeding" in the present code probably has a somewhat broader significance than this, however. Since the code requires no exception to the final judgment,¹⁶ and as a nonsuit is not authorized except upon a motion of a party, it follows that a summary judgment of dismissal at the close of the trial, without any motion therefor, is a final judgment deemed excepted to, although it is termed a dismissal.¹⁷

§ 99. Ex Parte and Appealable Orders.—An order made upon ex parte application is one of the orders enumerated in the code as orders deemed to have been excepted to.¹⁸ An order is defined by the code as: "Every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment."¹⁹ In an early case an order was defined to be "a decision made during the progress of a cause, either prior or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some question collateral to the main issue presented by the pleadings, or necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment."²⁰ These definitions have been approved as showing the proper scope of the term "order" as used in the code section under discussion. A ruling of a court made during the progress of a trial, either admitting or excluding evidence, is not, therefore, an order within the meaning of this code section, and is not deemed to have been excepted to by virtue of this provision.¹ As the code provides that an order or decision from which an appeal may be taken is deemed excepted to, it follows that no exception need be taken to an order on a motion for a different judgment on the findings.²

Order refusing to set aside a default.—By virtue of the provision that an interlocutory order or decision finally determining the rights of the parties or some of them is deemed to have been excepted to, no exception to an order refusing to set aside a default is necessary.³

§ 100. Form and Requisites of Exception.—The code provides that no particular form of exception is required;⁴ but when the exception is to the verdict or decision, upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, the objection must specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient.⁵

It is sufficient if the exception points out clearly the error complained of.⁶ As the exception is taken at the time of the ruling challenged, and as the grounds of objection have already been stated in the objection, it is sufficient for the party merely to say, following an adverse ruling, that he excepts.

With reference to the sufficiency of exceptions to instructions, formerly necessary, there was a clear distinction made between written instructions requested by the parties and oral instructions given by the court of its own motion. Exceptions to the written instructions might be general;⁷ but in the absence of a stipulation by counsel

IV. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

§ 101. In Civil Actions or Proceedings Generally.—An appeal may be taken from a judgment without moving for a new trial in the trial court.¹¹ But as regards certain points, it is generally regarded as the duty of counsel to give the trial court an opportunity to correct whatever error it may have made in respect thereto on motion for new trial, and where this is not done, the appellate court will not review the rulings of the trial court upon the point.¹² Thus, a party complaining of a refusal to grant a continuance should move for a new trial and support his application with the affidavits of absent witnesses or show that they cannot be obtained. If this be not done, the action of the trial court will not be reviewed on appeal.¹³ If the trial court changes its rulings to the prejudice of a party, the objection cannot be reviewed on appeal, unless the party first presents the matter to the trial court upon a motion for a new trial either on the ground of irregularity of the court or accident or surprise.¹⁴ Objections to the form of the verdict are available only on motion for new trial, and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.¹⁵ And this is true of the objection that the verdict awards excessive damages,¹⁶ or that it was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice.¹⁷

Rule in probate proceedings.—In probate proceedings, however, the merits of an appeal from a probate order can ordinarily be fully reached on a bill of exceptions to the order itself which is sought to be reviewed.¹⁸ As remarked by Mr. Justice McFarland, in a recent case:

“The disposition of many attorneys to inject the procedure of a motion for a new trial into probate litigation uselessly raises difficult questions. The merits of an appeal from a probate order can ordinarily be fully reached on a bill of exceptions to the order itself which is sought to be reviewed.”¹⁹

§ 102. Sufficiency of Evidence—Rule under the practice act.—Under the Practice Act, the appellate court could not review evidence on an appeal from a judgment. In order to obtain such a review it was necessary, (1) that the party move for a new trial on this ground;¹ (2) that he specify in his statement the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict or decision;² (3) that the motion be ruled on;³ and (4) that an appeal be taken from the order denying a new trial.⁴ The same rule applied in equity cases, especially after the passage of the act of 1861.⁵

Rule under the code.—In a recent decision of the supreme court in Bank, Mr. Justice Shaw (all other justices concurring) has given clear and definite expression to the code rule as to review on appeal of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision or verdict.

“Section 939 [of the Code of Civil Procedure] as enacted in 1872, and as it remained until 1915, contained this clause: ‘But an exception to the decision, or verdict, on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, unless the appeal is taken within sixty days after the entry of the judgment.’ . . . ⁶ In the amendment of 1915 this clause was omitted from the section. The plaintiffs’ claim is that this omission eliminates the only authority for a consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings where there was no motion for a new trial. There is no merit in the objection. Section 956, as amended in 1915, retains the provision previously contained therein that ‘upon an appeal from a judgment the court may review the verdict or decision.’ This clearly gives this court authority to consider the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or findings in every case where the evidence is properly included in the record on appeal, either by a bill of exceptions or by a record prepared as prescribed in section 953a, and without regard to the question of there having been a motion for a new trial.⁷ The code originally allowed an appeal from the judgment to be taken within one year after the entry thereof. Section 956, if not qualified by other sections, (overruling Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 145); Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 375.

6. And see the following authorities: Steen v. Hendy, 4 Cal. Unrep. 916, 38 Pac. 718 (holding the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision will not be considered where no motion for a new trial was made and the appeal from the judgment was not taken within sixty days); Davis v. Lezinsky, 93 Cal. 126, 28 Pac. 811. See, also, Forsythe v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 149 Cal. 569, 87 Pac. 24, where the court said that the sufficiency of the evidence would not be reviewed, as the plaintiff had failed to move for a new trial. It appears from the transcript on appeal, however, that the appeal from the judgment was not taken within sixty days.

7. For expressions contra, see Thompson v. White, 76 Cal. 381, 18 Pac. 399, and Petersen v. Taylor, 4 Cal. Unrep. 335, 34 Pac. 724.

would then have allowed the sufficiency of the evidence to be considered on an appeal taken at any time within the year. The above-quoted clause of section 939 did not give the right to such review, but merely put a limitation thereon, forbidding its exercise, except when the appeal was taken within sixty days. The right was given by section 956, which, in this respect, was not changed by the amendment. When the time of taking an appeal from the judgment was reduced to sixty days, by the amendment of 1915 to section 939, there remained no reason for the previous limitation and it was very properly omitted."⁸

Under the code, therefore, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings may be reviewed as effectually on appeal from the judgment as upon appeal from an order refusing a new trial. And this is so whether the appeal is taken by the regular or alternative method.⁹

§ 103. Errors of Law.—While under the Practice Act an appellate court would not review the facts of a case unless a new trial was demanded in the court below, it was established that a motion for new trial was not necessary in order to have reviewed errors of law occurring in the trial court.¹⁰ As was said in an early case:

“To hold that a new trial must be asked for in all cases before the error could be reviewed, would be in violation of all settled rules on this subject. At common law, a motion for new trial released the errors, and a writ of error would not lie after the motion had been

Unrep. 279, 24 Pac. 377 (opinion in Bank, 87 Cal. 241, 25 Pac. 411), where the court in department said the implication from section 939¹ was that the sufficiency of the evidence might be reviewed without a motion for new trial, if the appeal was taken in sixty days.

made. There is no provision in our Practice Act of which we are aware that has changed the rules so as to make a motion necessary. As a matter of public convenience, it ought not to be established, for it would delay appeals from one to three months, while the motion was pending, and . . . compel the judge below to commit the same error twice, before an appeal would lie."¹¹

The same is true under the code. Though permitted, it was never required that a party complaining of errors of law should move for a new trial in the court below before taking an appeal.¹² Accordingly, a motion for a new trial is not a prerequisite to the review on appeal of the following: An error in denying a trial by jury;¹³ errors in the admission of evidence;¹⁴ an error in granting a nonsuit;¹⁵ or errors in giving or refusing instructions.¹⁶ Nor is a motion for a new trial necessary to the review of an objection to a judgment which appears on the face of the findings,¹⁷ as, for example, where the court did not draw the proper conclusion from the facts found.¹⁸

The absence of the trial judge from the courtroom during a portion of the trial, however, is not an "error,"

Hodgdon*, 66 Cal. 187, 5 Pac. 77 (holding that as an order striking out a pleading was not specified on a motion for new trial, it could not be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. but an irregularity, and is not reviewable on appeal unless urged as a ground for new trial.¹⁹

An objection that the judgment is not authorized by the pleadings, as where the judgment is rendered upon a cause of action not sued upon, is apparent of record, and may be reviewed without as well as with a motion for new trial, provided there is an appeal from the final judgment. This objection is sometimes included among the grounds of the motion, but without any necessity, and its omission in stating the grounds of the motion raises no presumption that it is waived.²⁰

F. PROCEDURE TO PERFECT APPEAL AND TIME THEREFOR.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

§ 104. Introductory.—The constitution does not attempt to prescribe or regulate the procedure in taking and perfecting appeals, and the legislature has plenary powers over this subject.¹ There can be no question of the power of the legislature to prescribe any reasonable condition to the exercise of the right of appeal.²

The manner and the time of taking appeals in civil actions generally is governed by sections 939, 940, 941, 941a, 941b and 941c of the Code of Civil Procedure. By section 1714 the provisions of these sections are made applicable to appeals in probate proceedings, except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of the code dealing specifically with probate matters. When the chapter relating to appeals in general was amended or enlarged in 1907, by new sections furnishing an alternative method of appeal, the amendments and new sections by the terms of section 1714 are carried over and imported into probate proceedings, but like the provisions which they supplement, only in so far as they are consistent with the rules laid down in the title governing probate proceedings.³

§ 105. Methods of Taking Appeal in General.—There are two methods for taking appeals, either of which may be pursued and confers jurisdiction on the appellate court if there is a requisite compliance with the provisions of the code.⁴ One method, called the old or regular method, is prescribed by sections 940 and 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure; the other, called the new or alternative method, is prescribed by section 941a, 941b and 941c of that code.⁵ The new or alternative method was adopted in 1907 because of the extreme technicality which prevailed under the old method and of the frequent dismissals of appeals resulting therefrom.⁶ While the legislature has by the new method accomplished a radical change and wholesome reform in method by which appeals might be taken, it did not abolish the old method, for the prudential reason, among others, that some question as to the constitutionality of the act might arise.⁷ The constitutionality of the provisions relating to the new method has since been determined.⁸ There is nothing in the code which requires an appellant to make an election as to the method which he shall adopt in taking his appeal, or which concludes him from insisting that he has perfected an appeal under the new method, even if he has unsuccessfully attempted to make a good service of notice or filed an insufficient cost bond according to the requirements of the old. If upon examining the transcript it is found that it shows a notice of appeal properly filed which is sufficient ipso facto under the new and alternative method to perfect the appeal, the court will look no further, but will treat a failure to serve the notice or give a cost bond, or an error in attempting to do so, which might have been fatal under the old method, as a matter of no legal consequence.⁹

The code authorizes the taking of an appeal by the alternative method "from any judgment, order or decree of the superior courts of the state."¹⁰ An appeal may be taken by this method from orders as well as from judgments,¹¹ and as has already been stated, from orders and judgments in probate proceedings, as well as from judgments in civil actions generally.¹²

§ 106. Compliance With Statute—Waiver and Estoppel.—Section 936 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a judgment or order in a civil action, except when

There is but one remedy—an appeal—for which the legislature has provided two methods under which it may be asserted. The methods are not mutually exclusive, and the old-expressly made final, may be reviewed "as prescribed therein and not otherwise." The provisions of the code regulating the mode of taking appeals must be strictly complied with.¹³ And, as the statute is the sole source from which the right of appeal flows, every step which is thereby required to be taken in order to perfect an appeal is jurisdictional, without the observance of which there can be no valid appeal effected.¹⁴ So, also, in probate matters, the right of appeal and the mode of its exercise are purely statutory, and unless a strict compliance with the provisions of the law appears, an attempted appeal will be ineffectual.¹⁵ While it is true that an appellant must follow closely the provisions of the statute in order to have his appeal perfected, it is equally true that he is not required to do more than the statute demands.¹⁶

Waiver and estoppel.—In accordance with the general rule that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent or voluntary submission of the parties, jurisdictional requirements as to the proceedings to perfect an appeal cannot be waived.¹⁷ Though, as will be shown later, service of notice of appeal may be waived by a voluntary appearance.¹⁸ A waiver of the filing of notice by stipulation of the parties is not the equivalent of the filing.¹⁹ It has been held, however, that one may be estopped from urging a noncompliance with the statute even as to jurisdictional requirements. Thus, where the attorney for the respondent in the court below acknowledged service of the notice of appeal without disclosing the fact of the death of the respondent, and concealed the fact of death until after the expiration of the time to appeal, and where such attorney continued to act for the personal representative after his appointment, it was held that he was estopped from objecting to the service. The court said in substance that parties who have fraudulently prevented the service of notice by concealment of material facts and by a failure to enter their objection to the jurisdiction of the court at the proper time, and for the fraudulent purpose of preventing the proper service of the same have delayed making their objection until too late to remedy the defect, should be estopped to attack the notice given and question the jurisdiction of the court.²⁰

II. NOTICE OF APPEAL.

Nature and Form.

§ 107. Notice Under Regular Method in General.—Section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to appeals by the regular method provides:

“An appeal is taken by filing with the clerk of the court in which the judgment or order appealed from is entered, a notice stating the appeal from the same or some specific part thereof, and serving a similar notice on the adverse party, or his attorney. The order of service is immaterial.”

This statute, so far as it relates to the notice of appeal, has been substantially the same ever since the enactment of the Practice Act of 1851, and cases decided under the Practice Act are authority under the code. The notice of appeal is the initiatory step taken in the superior court to effect an appeal to the supreme court or district court of appeal.¹ In some respects and for some purposes, it corresponds to the summons by which the defendant is brought before the superior court,² but it is not process in a strict sense, as it need not contain all the elements of a summons,³ or be served upon the party himself.⁴ Rather it is the declaration of an intention to make further proceedings in a pending cause,⁵ and has as its object the imparting of information of the intention to appeal and what particular judgment or order is appealed from.⁶

Waiver of notice.—Though there are dicta that “the notice itself, like the issuance of summons, may be waived,”⁷ it is doubtful if the notice can be waived. This statement was casually made by the court in holding that there may be a waiver of “service” of notice. There is a vital distinction between a waiver of the “notice” itself and a waiver of “service” thereof. Moreover, it has been specifically held that a waiver of “filing” is not equivalent thereto.⁸

Form.—Like other notices in the cause, the statute requires that a notice of appeal be in writing,⁹ but it does not prescribe the form of the notice except by the provision that it shall state the appeal from the judgment or order or some specific part thereof.¹⁰ The notice of appeal should not contain an assignment or specification of errors.¹¹ And on an appeal from a final judgment, it is not necessary to give notice that the court will be asked to review certain orders. Indeed, any such notice will be treated as surplusage.¹² A defendant sued by a wrong name may, if the misnomer is not material, appeal by his true name, stating in the notice that he was sued by a particular name and then giving his true name.¹³ And where a judgment is based on a void publication of summons, it is proper practice for the defendant appealing therefrom to make a special appearance in the notice of appeal, "for the purpose of contesting the jurisdiction of the court over the person of the defendant."¹⁴

Defects.—In accordance with the maxim, "Utile per inutile non vitiatur," surplusage in the notice of appeal does not vitiate the notice,¹⁵ and when a notice of appeal is imperfect in a matter not deemed of vital substance, leave to correct it under permission given by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be taken.¹⁶ If the defect is one which is amendable as of course, it will be disregarded upon appeal.¹⁷

§ 108. Title and Address.—A notice of appeal under the old method should be properly entitled in the court and cause. But an omission of or a mistake in the title does not invalidate the notice if it intelligently refers to the action or proceeding, as section 1046 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a "notice . . . without the title of the action or proceeding in which it is made, or a defective title, is as valid and effectual for any purpose as if duly entitled, if it intelligently refer to such action or proceeding."¹⁸ A mistake as to the Christian name of a party does not invalidate a notice which is duly entitled as to the court and the department thereof in which the action was tried and which intelligently refers to the number of the case and to the judgment and order denying a motion for new trial.¹⁹ Even the fact that a notice of appeal is entitled in the wrong county does not defeat an appeal when the order appealed from is otherwise sufficiently identified and the respondent is not misled.²⁰

Address.—The code does not require that the notice of appeal be addressed to the adverse parties.¹ And undoubtedly the service of a notice, in which the address is omitted, upon the attorney who appeared for all the parties interested is sufficient to sustain an appeal as to all of them.² If, however, the notice should be addressed, care must be taken to address it to all the adverse parties, as service upon parties omitted from the address is ineffectual though the title of the court and cause gives the names of all the parties.³ It has been contended that the address is immaterial because the statute does not prescribe the form of notice and require an address. But the decisions are the other way. The principle appears to be, that while the address preceding the body of the notice is not essential to its validity, yet, if an address is given, it serves as a limitation of the notice, and shows the intention of the appellant to give notice only to those parties to whom it is addressed, and its effect is limited accordingly.⁴

Inasmuch as the statute provides that a party can receive the information through service of the notice on his attorney, it would be insisting upon an idle ceremony to require the notice to be addressed to the party as well as to his attorney. It is sufficient, therefore, if the notice be addressed to the attorney only. When the attorney served appears for several executors, the fact that the notice is directed to him as attorney for "executor" will be deemed a mistake of the scrivener which cannot mislead. Such defect is amendable as of course.⁵

§ 109. Description of Judgment or Order.—The notice of appeal is required to point out the particular judgment or order or the specific part thereof from which the appeal is taken.⁶ While it is doubtful whether a statute enacted in 1861 and providing that no appeal should be dismissed for insufficiency of the notice of appeal is still in force,⁷ and though a rigid rule of construction is given the notice in other respects,⁸ a liberal rule of construction is generally given to the description in the notice of the judgment or order appealed from in order to effectuate the rights of the parties to the appeal.⁹ It is only necessary that the notice identify the order appealed from with reasonable certainty.¹⁰

A description of an order as one made and entered on a specified date is a sufficient description where it does not appear that any other order was entered on that day.¹¹ So, also, a notice which merely states that the party appeals "from said judgment made and entered in said action in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff" is sufficiently definite when there is but one judgment in the action, though such a notice might be void for uncertainty if the record showed more than one judgment, or if it showed in addition to the judgment an order in the nature of a judgment.¹² A notice reciting that an appeal is taken from an order and judgment denying a motion for new trial and entering judgment against the defendant, though ambiguous, is open to a construction covering the judgment as well as the order denying a new trial, and will be applied thereto. If such notice were restricted to the order denying a new trial, the appellant would have no standing in court as such

Miller & Lux* (Cal.), 188 Pac. 800 (holding a notice of appeal from that part of the final judgment which limits the amount to be recovered by the defendant from the plaintiff to $760, indicates with reasonable certainty that part of the judgment which provides that the defendant recover $760); *Larson v. order is not now appealable.¹³ So, also, an appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer "and from the whole of said judgment" was held to include a judgment for costs, though the appeal from the order sustaining the demurrer was without effect.¹⁴ On the other hand, a notice of appeal from all orders made and entered in an action, either before or after judgment, is too general,¹⁵ and a recital of this character in a notice specifically enumerating certain orders will be treated as surplusage.¹⁶ A statement that the party appeals from that part of a judgment which fails to give him certain relief is an attempt to appeal from what does not appear in the judgment instead of what does appear and would undoubtedly be insufficient standing alone. If this statement is merely cumulative to another statement of appeal, it will be disregarded as surplusage.¹⁷

Amendment nunc pro tunc.—When an order is amended nunc pro tunc, there is in legal effect but one order, and a notice of appeal describing the first order is sufficient.²⁰

§ 110. Effect of Mistake in Description.—It is settled that a mistake in the notice of appeal as to the date of the order or judgment appealed from does not invalidate the appeal, where there is a description of the order or judgment referred to in other parts of the notice reasonably sufficient to identify it.¹ The object of notice of appeal is to impart information to the opposing party of the intention to appeal, and what specific judgment or order is appealed from. If the notice is sufficiently explicit in these particulars and does not mislead the respondent, it should be held sufficient.² Under this rule, the giving of an incorrect date of the entry of the judgment appealed from does not invalidate the appeal where it clearly appears that only one such judgment was ever entered in the case, or where there is enough on the face of the notice to show that the judgment or order mentioned in the record is the same as is referred to in the notice.³ So, also, a notice referring to the order on and from an order denying a new trial, may be taken by one notice, although all the parties to the former do not appeal from the latter; and a notice stating who the appellants are and what they respectively appeal from is sufficient); *Sharon v. motion for new trial as an order denying a rehearing is sufficient, as the word "rehearing" as here used can signify nothing else than a new trial.⁴ And if a notice of appeal from a part of a judgment specifies the part appealed from with reasonable certainty, so that the respondent is not misled, such notice will suffice even though the terms used in indicating the part of the judgment appealed from are defective.⁵

§ 111. Signature.—While the code nowhere expressly so requires, the notice of appeal should be signed. If the party appealing has appeared by attorney, the notice should be signed by his attorney of record, or an attorney formally substituted,⁶ or it seems by any attorney the appellant may choose to conduct the appeal, whether or not he was attorney of record in the court below or has been formally substituted. Since for certain purposes at least an appeal like a writ of error has been held to be a new proceeding, it would seem that the party to the action has full power to constitute an attorney to prosecute the appeal other than the attorney of record in the cause in the trial court, and that a notice of appeal signed by an attorney not of record would be sufficient.⁷ Opposed to this theory there are several early cases which clearly hold that a notice of appeal signed by an attorney who was not attorney of record for the appellant is insufficient.⁸ However this may be, the objection is one which may be waived, and is waived by an acknowledgment of service of notice of appeal,⁹ or by joining with the attorney signing the notice in the certificate to the correctness of the transcript.¹⁰ By so doing the respondent waives the objection that notice of substitution was not served upon him, and the objection to the notice of appeal. If the respondent wishes to rely upon the want of notice of substitution, he should return the notice or refuse to acknowledge service of it.¹¹ So, also, where the notice of appeal is signed by the attorney in fact for the appellant, the acknowledgment of service is a waiver of the defect.¹²

Where there are several attorneys.—Where a party has two or more attorneys of record in the trial court or a firm of attorneys, it has been held that either one of the two or either of the firm may sign the notice of appeal. While this course may not be technically correct, it has been acquiesced in so long that to hold the contrary would upset numerous appeals that have been taken in good faith.¹³

On appeal by incompetent.—The code requires that an infant or insane or incompetent person who is a party must appear either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court.¹⁴ This section applies only where the order of guardianship has been finally established. As no order of a superior court is final when an appeal from it is duly pending, it follows that on an appeal taken by a person from an order adjudging him incompetent and appointing a guardian, the notice of appeal may be signed by the attorney who appeared for the appellant in the guardianship proceeding.¹⁵

§ 112. Notice Under Alternative Method.—Section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to appeals by the alternative method, provides:

“Any person to whom the right of appeal from any judgment, order or decree of the superior courts of the state is granted, may appeal therefrom by filing with the clerk of the court in which the judgment, order or decree is rendered, a notice entitled in the cause in which said judgment, order or decree was made, which said notice shall state that the person giving the same does thereby appeal to the supreme court or district court of appeal, as the case may be, from the judgment, order or decree, or some specific part thereof; and the said notice must identify the said judgment, order or decree or the part thereof appealed from, with reasonable certainty.”

The terms of this section, referring to the notice of appeal and the service thereof, differ essentially from those of section 940. They indicate that in all other particulars except those specified, form is not to be held important or necessary to the validity of an appeal. The expression of certain things to be stated in the notice implies that others are not regarded as essential. For example, it is unnecessary that the adverse parties be named as such in the notice.¹⁶ It is true that there was no such requirement as to the notice of appeal under the regular method, but from judicial views as to the general rules of law applicable to such notices, it was held that a notice addressed to certain parties by name was ineffectual as to parties not mentioned, though named in the title of the action and actually served with the notice.¹⁷ Section 941b does not require service of the notice, but compels the prevailing parties to look to the files to ascertain whether or not an appeal has been taken. It follows that this limitation upon the effect of the notice is not applicable to notices under the new method, and that the mere mention of some of the adverse parties will not vitiate the appeal as to the others.¹⁸

The provisions relating to appeals by the alternative method do not free an appeal from the limitation of section 956 of the Code of Civil Procedure, forbidding on an appeal from a judgment a review of any appealable order; and under this method, as under the regular method, it is necessary for the notice to state separately whether the appeal is taken from the judgment or some order, or both.¹⁹

§ 113. Title and Designation of Appellant.—Section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that the notice of appeal be “entitled in the cause in which said judgment, order or decree was made.” Under this provision, where there are several coparties, either plaintiff or defendant, it is sufficient to give the name of one of the parties and to include the others under the designation “et al.,” when in the body of the notice it is stated that “the defendants in the above-entitled action desire to appeal and do hereby appeal.” Such a notice should be construed as indicating that all the coparties against whom judgment is entered appeal therefrom.²⁰ So, also, in an action in which the parties are jointly liable, a notice thus entitled is sufficient to indicate an appeal by all the coparties, though it is stated in the body that the parties “above named” appeal. The law requires that a liberal rule of construction be given such notices.¹

Designation of appellant.—The notice should state that the party giving it thereby appeals. The misnomer of one of several appellants in the notice does not require a dismissal of the appeal as to the others who are correctly named, when the judgment appealed from is otherwise sufficiently identified. And when it is perfectly apparent from the notice, when read in connection with the record, that the misnomer is a mere clerical misprision which could not have misled the adverse party, the notice is not even rendered invalid as to the appellant as to whom the misnomer occurred.² A statement following the name of the party in the body of the notice characterizing it as an executor, for example, is a mere description of the person and not a limitation of the character in which he takes the appeal. Notwithstanding such statement, the appeal is to be considered as an appeal by the party in any capacity in which he is entitled to take such appeal.³

§ 114. Statement that Party Appeals.—Under the alternative method the notice must state that the person giving it “does thereby appeal” to the supreme court or district court of appeal, as the case may be.⁴ There must be an actual compliance with this requirement in the statutory language or its equivalent, before the notice will be held to constitute a notice of appeal within the terms of the code.⁵ This notice has been confused with that prescribed in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the two are entirely distinct. The latter is not a notice of appeal. It is merely a step in the proceedings for the preparation of the record or transcript on appeal, and is not jurisdictional to the appeal.⁶ It follows that a notice to the clerk in literal compliance with 953a stating that the party “desires to,” “intends to,” “will,” or “has taken” an appeal, and requesting the clerk to prepare a transcript of the proceedings and evidence, cannot be construed as the notice of appeal required to be given by sections 940 or 941b of the code, and standing alone is insufficient as a notice of appeal.⁷

Lent v. California Fruit Growers' Assn., 161 Cal. 719, 121 Pac. 1002 (though the court made no statement of facts, the record shows that the only notice given was a notice for transcript under section 953a, in which it was recited that the defendants “intend to appeal” from the judgment); Salisbury v. Yawger, 30 Cal. App. Dec. 376; Eddy v. Hunter (Cal. App.), 189 Pac. 291 (a notice stating that the party “has appealed” is insufficient as a notice of appeal under section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, as is also a notice stating that the party “will appeal”); Oxford v. Imperial Southside Water

Distinguishable from this notice, is a notice which, though in form a notice under section 953a, also states that the party "does thereby appeal" from a judgment or order. Such a notice is good as a notice of appeal under section 941b of the code, notwithstanding the fact that it is so drawn as to serve the double purpose of a notice of appeal and a notice to the clerk under section 953a. The recital that the notice is given "pursuant to section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure" may properly be deemed applicable solely to the subsequent portion constituting notice to the clerk, or it may be rejected as surplusage.⁸

Request to clerk.—The notice of appeal under the alternative method need not contain a request that the transcript be made up and prepared, as provided in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure,⁹ and where the notice of appeal conforms to the requirements of section 941b, it cannot be amended to embody such request.¹⁰ But as has just been stated, the fact that the notice contains such request to the clerk does not vitiate it.¹¹

Necessity of Filing and Service.

§ 115. Filing in General.—The filing of the notice of appeal is indispensable in order to enable the appellate court to obtain jurisdiction of the cause, both under the regular¹² and alternative¹³ method of taking an appeal, and it cannot be waived.¹⁴ While the notice may be filed at any time after entry of the judgment or order appealed from and before the expiration of the time in which to appeal,¹⁵ it must not be filed before such entry,¹⁶ although where it appears that the notice was filed on the same day as the judgment or order appealed from was entered, an appellate court would not be justified in dividing a day for the purpose of rejecting jurisdiction of the appeal.¹⁷

Place of filing.—The notice of appeal must be filed “with the clerk of the court in which the judgment or order appealed from is entered.”¹⁸ This rule is applicable to an appeal from an order changing the place of trial to another county. Section 399 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that “the court to which an action or proceeding is transferred has and exercises over the same the like jurisdiction as if it had been originally commenced therein,” relates to the jurisdiction of the court over the trial of the action or other proceeding relating thereto and not to jurisdiction over orders or proceedings had prior to the transfer. Therefore, a notice of appeal filed in the county to which the transfer is made is ineffectual.¹⁹

When notice is deemed filed.—The rules as to the filing of papers generally are applicable in determining when a notice of appeal is filed.²⁰ A paper is filed when it is delivered at the place where it is to be filed, to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file.¹ If the filing can be proved by parol, the proof must show actual delivery of the paper to the clerk or one of his deputies, a delivery to him for the purpose of filing,² and a delivery at the place where it is to be filed. Delivering a paper to the proper officer at a place other than the office where it is required to be filed is not sufficient even though the officer indorse it filed.³ And merely leaving or depositing the notice in the clerk's office after office hours when no one is in the office does not constitute a legal filing on that day.⁴ The clerk is justified in refusing to file a notice of appeal until the payment of his fee, and a notice sent him by express is not deemed filed on the day of its receipt when the clerk immediately informs the attorney for the appellant that it would not be filed except upon the payment of the filing fee.⁵

§ 116. Necessity of Service Under Regular Method.—Section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to appeals taken by the regular method, specifically requires service of a notice of appeal upon the adverse party or his attorney.⁶ This provision is equally as mandatory as that with reference to the filing of notice,⁷ and if service is not made within the statutory time, and according to the requirements of the statute to effect service, the appellate court acquires no actual jurisdiction of the case,⁸ and will dismiss the appeal on its own motion, or on motion of the respondent,⁹ unless service is waived,¹⁰ or unless the appeal is sufficient under the code provisions relating to the alternative method, which require no service of the notice of appeal.¹¹ But when the determination of a motion to dismiss involves an examination of the entire record, and incidentally of the merits of the appeal, the consideration of the motion will be continued until the hearing of the appeal, especially where the motion is not made until after the appellant has filed his points and authorities.¹²

§ 117. Waiver of Service.—It is well established that an appellate court may obtain jurisdiction of an appeal as well by voluntary appearance by an adverse party as by service of notice of appeal upon him. The requirement that notice of appeal be served upon the adverse party is for the protection of such adverse party, and the service of the notice, like service of a summons, may be waived by him or his attorney, and is waived by a voluntary appearance.¹³ A mere waiver of service, however, is not effectual unless followed by some act equivalent to an appearance by which the party would be bound by the judgment of the court.¹⁴ As the omission to serve an adverse party goes to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, a failure to raise the objection until petition for rehearing filed does not waive the objection, there being no appearance by the party not served.¹⁵

When appearance must be made.—The service of notice of appeal has a twofold purpose—first, to give the appellate court jurisdiction of the person of the respondent, and, second, to give it jurisdiction of the subject matter of the appeal; and since jurisdiction over the subject matter can never be conferred by consent, the voluntary appearance of the respondent must be made within the time in which service of notice upon him would be effectual to vest jurisdiction of the appeal in the appellate court. To authorize an appearance to be made thereafter would be to confer jurisdiction by consent.¹⁶

What constitutes appearance.—A party makes a general appearance and waives service of notice of appeal upon him by entering into stipulations as to the proceedings on appeal, as by entering into a stipulation to the omission of certain matters from the transcript, or that the appeal shall abide the result of another appeal.¹⁷ So, also, a stipulation reciting the due perfection of an appeal is an admission of due service of a properly addressed notice of appeal upon all parties signing such stipulation.¹⁸

§ 118. Necessity Under Alternative Method.—No service of notice of appeal is necessary under the alternative method of taking appeals, as such service is specifically dispensed with by the code.¹⁹ The code provision is as follows:

“This notice [of appeal] need not be served upon any of the parties to the action or the proceeding, or their representatives or attorneys, but when filed within the time herein specified it shall, without further action on the part of the appellant, transfer the cause for decision and determination to the higher court.”²⁰

The main design here shown is to compel the prevailing parties to look to the files to ascertain whether or not an appeal has been taken, and to avoid the necessity previously imposed upon the appellant of determining which of the parties were adverse to him upon his proposed appeal, and of finding them and serving upon them the required notice, at the peril of losing his appeal if he made a mistake in his endeavor to do so.¹ The filing of a notice stating all that is specifically mentioned in the section as parts of such notice will constitute a valid appeal as to all the parties to the action, without any further action on the part of the appellant.² And the

On Whom Notice must be Served.

§ 119. In General.—The notice of appeal under the regular method must be served on “the adverse party or his attorney.”⁴ A compliance with this requirement is necessary to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, unless, as has been stated, such service is waived or rendered immaterial by a compliance with the provisions of the code relating to appeals by the alternative method.⁵ If there are several “adverse parties,” notice must be served on all, or their attorneys if they appeared by attorney. If such service is not made, the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction over the adverse party not served. Any judgment or order made with reference to the judgment or order appealed from would be ex parte and could not affect his rights or be binding upon him.⁶ Not only that, but the appellate court in such case acquires no jurisdiction over the appeal itself, and cannot hear the appeal even as between the parties served.⁷

Where an appeal is taken from the whole judgment, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to modify the judgment in such a manner as shall affect the rights of the parties on whom notice of appeal has not been served, as such rights have been ascertained and finally determined by the judgment.⁸ But if the omitted party would not be affected by a reversal or modification of the judgment appealed from, the court, notwithstanding the failure to serve a party, will decide the case with reference to the interests of the parties before it, so far as it may be done without affecting the interests of others.⁹ In other words, the persons whose interests will not be affected by the modification are not adverse parties and need not be served.¹⁰ The rules governing the question who must be served with notice of appeal are not identical with those which control the question as to who may have the right to appeal.¹¹ In the first place, the person served must be a party. But it is not always necessary that he be a party in the strict sense of the term. He may be a quasi party. For example, where a defendant before filing an answer moves on notice for an order substituting certain persons as defendants in his stead, and then on denial of his motion declines to amend, and judgment by default is rendered against him, the persons sought to be substituted are adverse parties entitled to notice of appeal. Although not named as parties to the judgment as it stands, they become quasi parties to the action so far as their rights were affected by the granting or refusal of the motion when they were served with notice of motion for the order of substitution.¹³ In the next place, the notice of appeal must be served upon the "adverse" party,¹⁴ or if he has appeared by his attorney, then upon his attorney.¹⁵ It is obvious that service need not be made upon one who is not an adverse party.¹⁶ As will be shown later, it is not necessary that service be made upon the party personally,¹⁷ and where the respondent is a non-resident of the state who appeared in person without an attorney, service should be made on the clerk for him, pursuant to section 1015 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁸

Service on party convicted of a felony.—The conviction of a felony which does not involve life imprisonment does not render the party civiliter mortuus so as to prevent service of notice of appeal on him and require the dismissal of an appeal.¹⁹

question whether he appears upon the face of the record in the attitude of plaintiff, or defendant, or intervener.⁵ An adverse party is a party whose interest in relation to the subject of the appeal is in conflict with a reversal of the order or decree appealed from, or the modification sought by the appeal;⁶ one who appears, by the record, to be interested in the judgment so that he will be affected by its reversal⁷ or modification,⁸ or whose rights would or might be affected by a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from.⁹ The question is whether the judgment gives a party something which will be taken away by a reversal.¹⁰

§ 121. Showing in Record.—It is not every person who may be affected by a reversal or modification of a judgment or order who is an “adverse party” entitled to service of notice of appeal. While the rule is thus broadly stated in a number of cases, this rule must be construed in connection with another rule that only the record can be examined for the purpose of determining who are such adverse parties.¹¹ In other words, the “adverse party” upon whom a notice of appeal is to be served is the party who appears by the record to be adverse,¹² and the burden is on the party moving to dismiss the appeal to show from the record that a party not served was adverse.¹³ The record to be considered for this purpose is the record of the proceedings in which the appeal is taken.¹⁴ Whether a party to the action is adverse to the appellant must be determined by their relative positions on the record and the averments in their pleadings, rather than from the manner in which he expressed his wishes at the trial or from any presumption to be drawn from the relation of the parties to each other, or to the subject matter of the action in matters outside of the action. If his position on the record makes him nominally adverse, he must be so considered for the purpose of an appeal from a judgment thereon.¹⁵ The fact that a defendant, for example, makes a motion to dismiss a motion of the other defendants, does not take away the adverse character he holds to the plaintiff.¹⁶ So, also, the fact that the judgment or order may be used as evidence in some collateral action or proceeding, or that its reversal may have a remote or consequential effect to the prejudice of one who is not a party thereto, does not entitle such person to be made a party to the appeal, and require service of notice of appeal upon him.¹⁷

§ 122. Application of Rule.—The question as to who is an adverse party in particular actions is treated in this work in the particular titles. A few illustrations will be given here for the purpose of showing the general application and limitations of the rule.¹⁸ A defaulting mortgagor is an adverse party to an appeal from a judgment of foreclosure taken by a subsequent lienholder who contests the validity of the mortgage, for if the appellant's contention is sustained, the mortgagor will be left personally liable on the note.¹⁹ So, also, a mortgagor is an adverse party to an appeal by a claimant of an undivided interest in the premises who contends that the mortgage is not a lien upon his interest and that a judgment foreclosing it upon the entire premises is erroneous, as a modification of the judgment in this respect would tend to increase his per-

Sandman, 154 Cal. 748, 99 Pac. 204 (contractor as adverse party to judgment foreclosing lien for services); Estate of Carpenter, 146 Cal. 661, 80 Pac. 1072 (an attorney need not be served with notice of appeal from an order settling executor's accounts); Estate of Bell, 125 Cal. 539, 58 Pac. 153 (a purchaser at an executor's sale is an adverse party to an appeal from an order confirming the sale); Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Lewis, 111 Cal. 519, 44 Pac. 175 (upon an appeal from an order refusing to vacate a decree of foreclosure, a holder of a second lien whose lien is directed to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale after the satisfaction of the mortgage is an adverse party); Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758 (holding grantee of mortgagee to be an adverse party to an appeal from that portion of a foreclosure decree giving priority to other liens, where the modification sought by the appellant would increase his personal liability. But he is not an adverse party to an appeal seeking to have the decree modified so as to determine that the lien claimants had no lien upon the premises, as the reversal would not injuriously affect him. Followed in Warren v. Ferguson, 108 Cal. 535, 41 Pac. 417); Brown v. Rouse, 93 Cal. 237, 28 Pac. 1044 (holding a defendant dismissed from the action who would not be affected by a reversal of the judgment between the other parties was not an adverse party); Gardner v. Stare, 6 Cal. Unrep. 777, 66 Pac. 3 (in an action concerning the separate property of a wife, the husband who had no interest therein and who defaulted is not an adverse party); Wilson v. Shea, 29 Cal. App. 788, 157 Pac. 543 (holding guarantor not an adverse party).

sonal liability if his interest should sell for less than the amount of the mortgage.²⁰ But upon an appeal from an order granting a writ of assistance, to put a purchaser at a foreclosure sale in possession, a subsequent lienholder whose lien is directed to be paid out of the proceeds of the foreclosure sale is not an adverse party to such appeal.¹ Where an insurance company defendant appeals from a judgment on an insurance policy which directs that the amount of a mortgage be satisfied out of the judgment, the mortgagee, who was made a codefendant, is an adverse party, as a reversal would deprive him of the fund provided for the payment of the mortgage. It is no answer to say that he may ultimately recover the money in another action directly against the insurance company or from the mortgage.² So, also, a vendor who has taken a mortgage from a subsequent purchaser of land is an adverse party to an appeal by such subsequent purchaser directing specific performance of a prior contract of sale and a payment of the mortgage out of the judgment.³

When in proceedings supplementary to execution the judgment debtor is not a participant, he is not a party to the record and need not be served with notice of appeal from the order against the garnishee.⁴

at all.⁸ Inasmuch as the common-law rule has been superseded and it is permissible in this state to reverse and vacate a judgment against joint tort-feasors as to the one against whom error has been committed and continue the judgment in full force and effect as to the remaining defendants who have not appealed, nonappealing defendants are not adverse parties where the error assigned does not affect them, and the judgment, if reversed, will not be vacated as to them.⁹

§ 124. Service on Parties Defaulting or not Appearing. Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1909 provides:

“No . . . notice of appeal . . . need be served upon any party whose default has been duly entered or who has not appeared in the action or proceeding.”

Section 1014 of the same code provides:

“Where a defendant has not appeared, service of notice or papers need not be made upon him unless he is imprisoned for want of bail.”

A defendant who has not been served with process, or appeared in the action, cannot be affected by any judgment rendered therein or by any reversal or modification thereof on appeal, and therefore he is not an adverse party entitled to notice of appeal.¹⁰ Under this rule, service of notice need not be made upon fictitious defendants who have not been served or appeared in the action.¹¹ The rule, however, has no application to a case where a party is made defendant for want of consent to be a coplaintiff, and where judgment has been given in favor of him, though he has not appeared or pleaded.¹²

A defendant against whom a default is entered is not an adverse party to an appeal from a judgment against the other defendants which cannot affect his interests.¹³

Where a defendant to an action on a promissory note makes default, and, after trial, judgment is rendered against him and a codefendant,—against one on his default and against the other on the verdict,—the defaulting defendant is not an adverse party to an appeal by his codefendant, as the reversal would not set aside the default.¹⁴ In an action to foreclose a mortgage, a default of defendants other than the mortgagor is an admission of an allegation that their interest is subject to the lien, and where the judgment merely forecloses their interest in the property, it is evident that they cannot be affected by any reversal or modification of the judgment.¹⁵

of notice of appeal from the order on the motion.¹⁶ On an appeal from an order denying a new trial, when allowed, only the parties to the motion upon which the order was made were necessary parties to the appeal.¹⁷ Persons not served with notice of intention and who did not become parties to the proceeding are not adverse parties and need not be served with notice of appeal, as they are not parties to the record of the proceeding in which the appeal is taken.¹⁸ When a motion for a new trial is made by several defendants, the plaintiff to whom the motion is directed is the adverse party on such motion, and where only one defendant appeals from the order refusing the motion, it is not necessary to serve notice upon the other defendants who joined in the motion.¹⁹ The necessity of serving a notice of appeal upon a respondent who is an adverse party is not obviated by the death of such party; and in such event service must be made upon his proper representative.²⁰

§ 126. Rule Applied to Probate Proceedings.—The rule that only parties to the record are adverse parties has been applied to appeals in probate proceedings. Thus, it has been held that a creditor who has not appeared in a proceeding to settle an administrator's account is not an adverse party to an appeal, though the object of the appeal is to vacate an order allowing his claim, for the reason that though vitally interested, he was not a party to the proceedings, in the trial court.¹ So, also, for the same reason, where certain creditors file objections to an administrator's account and the administrator appeals from an order surcharging his accounts, it is unnecessary to serve creditors who have not appeared. That a person interested in an estate, although his name and his interest is disclosed on the face of the record, is not necessarily a party to the cause or proceeding, is manifest from a consideration of the different cases where persons interested may or may not appear, at their option. In a proceeding to probate a will, any person interested, whether as devisee, legatee or heir, may appear and contest the probate. The petition for probate must show the names of the heirs and devisees, and hence their interest must always appear in the record. Yet, it would not be contended that an heir, devisee or legatee who fails to appear at the time of the hearing of the petition is in any sense a party to such proceeding. As to the petition for administration, there may be many persons who are entitled to letters and who are interested in the matter of appointment. But if they fail to appear or contest the right of the petitioner, it is manifest that they cannot be considered parties. Upon the settlement of an account, every creditor, heir, legatee or devisee is a person interested, and as such has a right to enter an appearance and become a party. The names of these persons generally appear upon the face of the account, or upon some of the documents referred to therein, but the giving of the notice and the statement of their rights or claims, do not, ipso facto, make them parties to the proceeding.² Devisees are adverse parties who have ap-account, or in some way make themselves parties of record to that proceeding, are necessary parties to an appeal from any order made therein, and that other persons equally interested and equally affected by the order, but who do not see fit to make any contest or objection to the account, or to any matters stated therein, need not be served with notice of appeal). See Estate of Scott, 124 Cal. 671, 57 Pac. 654 (holding a legatee who appeared is an adverse party to an appeal from an order admitting a will to probate), and In re Delaney, 110 Cal. 563, 42 Pac. 981 (holding upon an appeal from an order settling the account of an executor, that the executor is the only party upon whom it is necessary to serve a notice of appeal).

§ 127. Service on Counsel.—Section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires service of the notice of appeal on the adverse party “or his attorney.”⁴ Such notice is not process requiring personal service upon the party himself for the purpose of bringing him before the court.⁵ Therefore, section 940 is to be read in connection with section 1015 of the code, providing that in all cases where a party has an attorney in the action or proceeding, the service of papers when required must be upon the attorney instead of the party. The latter provision controls the former, and when the adverse party has an attorney, service must be made upon the attorney,⁶ and appeals have been dismissed for violation of this rule.⁷

The attorney here referred to is the attorney of record of the party, and service upon the attorney who signed the original pleading of a party is sufficient, in the absence of a substitution of attorneys, though another attorney signed the amended pleading.⁸ Indeed, service on an attorney who is not the attorney of record and who has not been substituted is ineffectual.⁹ Where the so-called special appearance of the party defendant in an action is in reality a general appearance, the notice of appeal may be served on the attorney representing the defendant on such special appearance, in the absence of any substitution of attorneys.¹⁰ If the respondent has two counsel of record, service may be made upon either.¹¹

§ 128. Effect of Death of Party to be Served.—The necessity of serving notice of appeal upon a respondent who is an adverse party is not obviated by the death of such party.¹² If any adverse party has died, service must be made upon the personal representative of the decedent,¹³ after he has been made a party to the action. Service upon the personal representative before he has been substituted as a party to the suit is ineffectual, because until that time he is as much a stranger to the proceedings as if he were not the executor or administrator.¹⁴ If the appellant is unable to procure the appointment of a personal representative, and to serve such representative within the required time, his appeal is lost.¹⁵ He cannot save his appeal by serving the attorney of the party,¹⁶ unless authorized by statute,¹⁷ or circumstances estopping the parties from raising the objection exist. The authority of the attorney to act is terminated by the death of his client, and service of notice on him thereafter is ineffectual.¹⁸

Requisites of Service and Time Therefor.

§ 129. Time of Service.—Under the Practice Act an appeal was taken by filing with the clerk a notice of appeal and serving a copy of the notice upon the adverse party or his attorney. The time or order of service was not expressly declared, but as the service was of a copy, it was assumed and held by the court that the notice should be served on the same day as the filing or subsequent thereto.¹⁹ And in view of the statutes relating to the undertaking on appeal, it was held that the notice, if not served on the same day as the filing of the notice, must be served before or at the time of the filing of the undertaking. The statute provided for no special notice of filing the undertaking, as the respondent was required to except to the sureties within five days of the "filing" of the undertaking; this holding was necessary to secure to the respondent the full time allowed him for the purpose of excepting to the sureties.²⁰

Under the code.—Section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure as originally enacted required the filing of the notice of appeal, and the service of the notice to be effected at the same time, that is to say, on the same day.¹ This section was amended in 1874, and it has not since been changed. As amended the section is substantially the same as the Practice Act, save that it provides that "the order of service is immaterial," and requires the undertaking to be filed within five days after the "service" of the notice of appeal, instead of after "filing" as required by the Practice Act. The phrase "the order of service is immaterial" is the equivalent of "whether the service precede or follow the filing of the notice is immaterial."² And it has been held a number of times that service of the notice may precede the filing.³ Not only that, but there is no particular time after service within which the notice must be filed,⁴ provided, that

Pacheco*, 46 Cal. 650, holding that as the statute did not provide for notice of filing of the undertaking, it was intended that the service of the notice of appeal should itself operate as such notice. Section 948 of the code now provides for notice of filing of the undertaking. Furthermore, a failure of the sureties to justify does not, under the present practice, render the appeal ineffectual. See infra, § 160. Therefore, the reasoning of these cases is not applicable to the present practice.

it is filed before the expiration of the time for appeal.⁵ An appeal is not perfected until all the things required by the statute to be done have been done; in other words, until the notice of appeal has been both filed and served. A failure to do either of these things within the time within which a party has the right to appeal is fatal to the taking of the appeal, though the other has been done. Therefore, a failure to serve a notice until after the expiration of the statutory period is fatal to the appeal, though the notice was filed within the time limited.⁶

§ 130. Manner of Service Generally.—Service of a notice of appeal may be personal, by delivery to the party or attorney on whom service is required to be made,⁷ or it may be made by leaving a copy at the office or residence of such attorney or party, as provided in section 1011 of the Code of Civil Procedure,⁸ or by mail, as provided in sections 1012 and 1013 of the same code,⁹ or in the case of nonresidents, it may be made as provided in section 1015 of the code,¹⁰ provided always the circumstances exist authorizing service in this manner.

the service, but it can be effected through a clerk or messenger, or through any agency by which a "delivery" can be made, and when a notice is so delivered, the service becomes a personal service. The person seeking to make the service can avail himself of any agency, such as an express company, or the instrumentality of the postoffice department, with as much effect as if he had employed any other messenger. The fact that the person upon whom the service is to be made resides or has his office in a different place from that of the person making the service does not require that the service be made by mail, or preclude a personal service.¹¹ If the person to be served refuses to receive the notice, the notice may be left on a table in his presence.¹²

§ 131. Service by Leaving Copy.—In addition to service by delivery, service may be made upon the attorney as follows:

"If upon an attorney, it may be made during his absence from his office, by leaving the notice or other papers with his clerk therein, or with a person having charge thereof; or when there is no person in the office, by leaving them between the hours of nine in the morning and five in the afternoon, in a conspicuous place in the office; or, if it is not open so as to admit of such service, then by leaving them at the attorney's residence, with some person of not less than eighteen years of age, if his residence is in the same county with his office; and if his residence is not known, or is not in the same county with his office, or being in the same county it is not open, or there is not found thereat any person of not less than eighteen years of age, then by putting the same, inclosed in a sealed envelope, into the postoffice directed to such attorney at his office, if known; otherwise to his residence, if known; and if neither his office nor his residence is known, then by delivering the same to the clerk of the court for the attorney."¹³

Under this provision a notice left in a conspicuous place upon the office desk of the attorney, in the presence of the person in charge of the office at the time and after calling his attention to the notice thus served, is, in contemplation of law, left "with a person having charge of the office."¹⁴ When service is made upon a party, "It may be made by leaving the notice at his residence, between the hours of eight in the morning and six in the evening, with some person of not less than eighteen years of age,"¹⁵ and, if his residence is not known, by delivering the same to the clerk of the court for such party."¹⁶

§ 132. Service by Mail.—It is clear that notices of appeal may be served by mail.¹⁷ Such service is termed a substituted service, and is intended to take the place of, and be equivalent in point of law and effect to, a personal service.¹⁸ But as this is a substituted service, it is incumbent upon anyone who would avail himself of this mode of service to have it clearly appear upon the record that the case is one in which such service is permitted, and that the mode pointed out by the statute for making such service has been strictly followed.¹⁹ Under the code provisions authorizing the service of notices by mail, it is permissible to serve a notice of appeal by mail when the person making the service and the person on whom it is to be made reside or have their offices in different places, and when there is a regular mail communication between the place where it is mailed and the place to which it is sent.²⁰ It must appear that the person served and the appellant, if the service is made by him,¹ or the attorney for the appellant if the service is made by the attorney,² reside or have their offices in different places. When service is made by a third person, the attorney of the appellant who has signed the notice, and not the agent, must be regarded as the person making the service.³ And an affidavit of a third person is insufficient which shows that the affiant resided in a different place from the person served but which contains nothing to show where the appellant or his attorney resides.⁴ If respondent has two attorneys, one of whom resides or has his office where the person making the service is, and the other resides in a different place, service by mail may be made on the latter, especially when the circumstances are such as to raise a doubt in the mind of the appellant as to the position of the former in the case.⁵

How service is made.—When service is made by mail, the notice must be deposited in the postoffice in a sealed envelope addressed to the person on whom it is to be served, at his office or place of residence, and the postage paid.⁶ It is not necessary that the notice be deposited in the postoffice at the place where the attorney for the appellant resides, or has his office, as there is nothing in the language of this or any other statute indicating an intention on the part of the legislature to require the party making the service to deposit the paper in any particular one of the postoffices of the state having regular mail connection with the place to which the paper is to be sent.⁷ While the envelope containing the notice should be addressed to the attorney of the adverse party at his office or place of residence, the appellant may, in opposition to a motion to dismiss the appeal, show by other proof that the notice was properly served, even though the transcript be defective in this respect. The service by mail does not contemplate a delivery as a part of the service, as is evident by the provision of section 1013, that "the service is complete at the time of the deposit" in the postoffice.⁸ And since, as has been already said in regard to personal service, the party making service may employ any agency in making delivery, even the post-office department,⁹ the appellant may show that the notice, though misdirected, had been forwarded to the respondent and had been received by him. Such proof establishes personal service upon the respondent, and confers jurisdiction on the appellate court. The affidavit of the respondent is competent proof of this fact.¹⁰

Proof of Service.

§ 133. In General.—Proof of service of notice of appeal must be made.¹¹ While the code does not provide how this proof shall be made, it has been held that the certificate of the sheriff, the admission of the respondent's attorney, or the affidavit of a third person making the service is competent as proof of the fact.¹²

The usual method of making proof of service is by the admission of the respondent's attorney.¹³ Such admission should be signed by the attorney served.¹⁴ An attorney representing several parties may limit his admission of service to some of the parties, and where he does so, such admission cannot constitute service upon the remainder.¹⁵ The fact that proof of service is not attached to the notice of appeal is of no consequence.¹⁶

Where proof is lost.—If the original proof of service be lost, a copy may be filed and used instead of the original, and the substituted paper is entitled to the same weight as would be the original.¹⁷

§ 134. Sufficiency of Proof.—An affidavit of service of notice of appeal should strictly and properly be made by the person who had himself made the service. At all events, it should show that the affiant had personal knowledge of the facts.¹⁸ The affidavit must state positively the fact of service.¹⁹ If service is not personal, the affidavit must show the existence of the facts authorizing service in this manner, and a strict compliance with all the requirements of the law to effect service,²⁰ or at least a full substantial compliance therewith.¹ If service is made by leaving a copy in the office of the attorney, the affidavit must show that there was no person in the office at the time.² And it is not sufficient in this respect merely to state that there was no one "in the front room" of the office.³ The affidavit must show also that the office was open,⁴ that the notice was left in a conspicuous place in the office, and that it was left there between the hours of 9 in the morning and 5 in the afternoon.⁵

Service by mail.—If service by mail is made, the affidavit must show that the person to be served and that the person making the service, if service is made by the appellant,⁶ or that the attorney for the appellant, if service is made by him or a third person,⁷ reside or have their offices in different places. The place of residence must be shown, as no presumption with respect thereto arises from the mere circumstance that the action is tried in a particular place.⁸ Where the affidavit is made subsequent to the date of mailing, the place of residence as of the day the notice was deposited in the postoffice should be shown.⁹ The affidavit must also show that

§ 135. Authenticating Proof to Appellate Court.—While there is no provision in the statute or rules of the supreme court prescribing the mode in which service of the notice of appeal shall be authenticated, the better practice is to have the proof of such service made a part of the record in the court from which the appeal is taken, in order that there may be evidence in that court that the judgment has been removed therefrom.¹² The jurisdiction of the court to hear an appeal depends upon the fact that notice has been properly served, not upon the proof of that fact being contained in the transcript.¹³ Where notice to dismiss is made upon the ground that the transcript fails to show service of a notice of appeal, the appellant may, upon the hearing of the motion to dismiss, move for leave to supply proof of such service.¹⁴ Upon leave being granted, he may file in the appellate court either original proof of such service or a certificate of the clerk below mailing was made two days after the service of the notice, which avers that the attorneys making the service and the attorneys served "reside" at places specified, between which there "is" a regular communication by mail, fails to show their place of residence at the time of service, and is insufficient).

that such proof has been made and filed in that court.¹⁵ This proof may be made before the hearing of the motion when there is sufficient time after the defect is discovered.¹⁶ So, also, if the affidavit of proof be defective, objection to the service of notice of appeal may be obviated by the filing of a new affidavit showing due service of the original notice of appeal, free from objection, and an admission of service by the respondent.¹⁷ The appellate court should be liberal in allowing such proof to be made when it can cause the respondent no injustice, and which will secure to the appellant a hearing on the merits. Especially will this course be allowed where the defect is one arising out of a careless use of language and the objection is technical.¹⁸ If, however, such proof is not made and the transcript contains no proof of service, the appeal will be dismissed.¹⁹ But it will not be dismissed for failure of the transcript to contain proof of service of the notice, if the appellant is able to show that service has in fact been properly made.²⁰

III. SECURITY.

Necessity for and Waiver.

§ 136. Under the Old Method.—With reference to the security on appeals taken by the regular method, section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

“The appeal is ineffectual for any purpose, unless within five days after service of the notice of appeal, an undertaking be filed or a deposit of money be made with the clerk, as hereinafter provided, or the undertaking be waived by the adverse party in writing."

This provision has not been changed since the year 1874. It is mandatory. If the required security is not given, the statute declares that the appeal is ineffectual for any purpose.¹ The appellate court is without jurisdiction² and the appeal will be dismissed,³ unless the appeal is sufficient under the alternative method in which no undertaking is required.⁴

Where several appeals are taken.—Where several appeals are taken in one action, there must be an undertaking on appeal in the sum of three hundred dollars, or a deposit of that amount in connection with each appeal, and this whether the notice of appeal is given by separate notices or in one instrument.⁵ But where an appeal is taken from several nonappealable orders (reviewable upon an appeal from the judgment), and from the judgment, the appeal is in legal effect only an appeal from the judgment, and a single undertaking for three hundred dollars which refers intelligibly to the judgment is sufficient.⁶

A single exception to the rule requiring an undertaking on each of several appeals was recognized when an order denying a new trial was directly appealable. An appeal from this order and from a judgment were so far regarded as a single appeal that a single undertaking for three hundred dollars was deemed sufficient to uphold both appeals. The only reason given for this exception was that the practice had continued too long to warrant disturbing it.⁷

§ 137. Waiver.—An undertaking on appeal or deposit may be waived by the respondent.⁸ In this connection the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

“The undertaking may be waived by the adverse party in writing.”⁹

“In all cases, the undertaking or deposit may be waived by the written consent of the respondent.”¹⁰

Under these provisions the waiver of an undertaking on appeal must be in writing, and it must be express. Moreover, the stipulation must be signed with the object and intent to effect such waiver. Where there is no allusion in the stipulation to the undertaking and nothing to indicate an intention to waive it, an undertaking is not waived by a stipulation extending the time of the appellant for the filing of his brief,¹¹ or by a stipulation to have the cause placed on the calendar out of its regular order.¹² But where there is a stipulation attached to the transcript to the effect that an undertaking in due form has been properly filed, it will be supposed either that a good and sufficient undertaking was filed, or that the filing was waived.¹³ However, it is a rule that such certificate is not conclusive upon the appellate court.¹⁴

The waiver of an undertaking must be made within the time for filing it. If attempted to be made subsequently, after the appeal has lapsed, there is no cause pending in the appellate court in which to make a stipulation.¹⁵ It is not necessary, however, that the waiver be filed within that time, if it is required to be filed at all.¹⁶

under the new method, the mere filing of the notice of appeal in a proper manner operates, ipso facto, to perfect the appeal, and a failure to serve the notice or give a cost bond, or an error in attempting to do so, which might have been fatal to the appeal under the old method, may be treated as a matter of no legal consequence.¹⁸ It is only for the purpose of obtaining a stay of proceedings that the appellant must file an undertaking.¹⁹ Even though an appellant may have attempted to follow the old method, an appeal will not be dismissed for want of undertaking, if the steps taken to perfect the appeal comply with all the requirements of the new method.²⁰ The fact that a bill of exceptions was prepared in place of a reporter's transcript has no bearing on this question. If an appeal is properly taken in compliance with either the old or new method, the record may be made up in any way permitted by the code.¹

protecting respondents. In view of this policy, the rule is well settled that statutory exemptions will not be extended by implication beyond the cases specified in the statute.² The fact that a person not exempt from giving an undertaking on appeal joins in the appeal of one so exempt does not relieve the former from the necessity of filing a proper undertaking. If he fails to give the requisite undertaking, his appeal will be dismissed, but it does not follow that the appeal of the other party will share a like fate. By joining in giving notice of appeal the purposes of the notice are fully accomplished, and the situation is no different from that which would be presented had the exempt party prosecuted his separate appeal and duly served the other with notice thereof.³

Where there are several appellants.—The code does not require a separate undertaking on the part of each appellant. The provision is that the undertaking must be executed “on the part of the appellant,” and as the code provides that the singular number includes the plural, it follows that several persons joining in one appeal may support such appeal by one undertaking in the prescribed sum of three hundred dollars. Moreover, there is the same reason for holding that the appellants may unite in the undertaking as in the notice of appeal.⁴ The fact that the respective appellants do not assert the same interests, or that some may not be aggrieved, does not necessitate their giving separate undertakings. The fact that the sum fixed may not be sufficient security to protect the respondent is immaterial.⁵

§ 140. On Appeal from Probate Orders.—The code provides as follows:

“When an executor, administrator, or guardian, who has given an official bond, appeals from a judgment or order of the superior court made in the proceedings had upon the estate of which he is executor, administrator, or guardian, his official bond shall stand in place of an undertaking on appeal; and the sureties thereon shall be liable as on such undertaking.”⁶

The covenants of the bond of an executor or administrator do not make it, on its face, an undertaking on appeal; and it becomes such, under certain circumstances, only by virtue of the provision of section 965 just quoted.⁷ This provision has reference only to appeals from orders made in proceedings for the settlement of the estate of which the appellant is the executor or administrator,⁸ and in which the estate is interested. It does not, for example, exempt an executor or administrator from giving security on an appeal from an order revoking his letters, as such appeal involves personal matters, and is not a matter in which the estate is interested.⁹ Furthermore, this section applies only to one who at the time of the appeal “is” an administrator, executor or guardian. One who was such executor, administrator or guardian, but who resigned before taking an appeal, is not within the scope of the statute.¹⁰ Unlike section 946 of the Code of

§ 141. Persons Acting in Another's Right.—Section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

“The court below may, in its discretion, dispense with or limit the security required by this chapter, when the appellant is an executor, administrator, trustee, or other person acting in another's right.”

This provision, though contained in a code section relating to stay of execution pending appeal, seems to be applicable to the three hundred dollar undertaking on appeal, and has been so applied in several cases.¹² However, it is distinct from section 965 of the code just discussed. This one applies to cases in which the executor, administrator or guardian is party plaintiff or defendant in an action,¹³ while section 965 applies to appeals from judgments and orders made in probate proceedings.¹⁴

While the order under this section rests entirely in the discretion of the court, and is never a matter of course,¹⁵ it is necessary, to authorize such an order, that the appellant act in another's right. Such an order, for example, cannot be made on an appeal from an order revoking letters of administration, as the appellant in such case is acting in his own right.¹⁶ It is not indispensably necessary, however, that the judgment should be rendered against the appellant in his official capacity. It is sufficient if it is made to appear to the court that the matter in litigation really involves the rights of the estate, and that if the judgment is unreversed, the property rights of such estate will be affected and its assets diminished. Thus, where in an action to recover money the defendant executor claims the right to retain it as funds of the estate, and judgment is rendered against him personally, the executor in appealing from such judgment is in reality acting for the estate and security may be dispensed with, as such appeal is a continued assertion by him of the right of the estate to the fund in controversy.¹⁷ Under this provision the court may also dispense with security of a municipal officer sued in his official capacity.¹⁸

When order must be made.—The order dispensing with security under section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be made within the time allowed for filing the undertaking on appeal. After the appeal has lapsed, it cannot be restored by an order subsequently made, and a direction that such order be entered nunc pro tunc is unavailing.¹⁹

Entry of order.—The action of the court does not depend upon the entry of the order dispensing with security in its minutes, but is effectual when made by the court and filed with the clerk.²⁰

§ 142. States, Counties, Cities, Towns and Their Officers.—Section 1058 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

17. Kirsch v. Derby, 93 Cal. 573, 29 Pac. 218 (it makes no difference that no answer has been filed by the executor and judgment is rendered against him by default, where the complaint in effect charges that he collected the money sued for in his representative capacity and claims the right as executor to retain it and not otherwise).

20. Von Schmidt v. Widber, 99 Cal. 511, 34 Pac. 109.

“In any civil action or proceeding wherein the state, or the people of the state, is a party plaintiff, or any state officer, in his official capacity or on behalf of the state, or any county, city and county, city, or town, is a party plaintiff or defendant, no bond, written undertaking, or security can be required of the state or the people thereof, or any officer thereof, or of any county, city and county, city, or town; but on complying with the other provisions of this code, the state, or the people thereof, or any state officer acting in his official capacity, have the same rights, remedies, and benefits as if the bond, undertaking, or security were given and approved as required by this code.”¹

While this section of the code specifically exempts the state from giving an undertaking on appeal when it is a party plaintiff,² it does not do so in terms when it is a party defendant. But it has been held that notwithstanding this omission, no undertaking is required of the state when made a defendant, as the intention to dispense with the bond on the part of the state in all cases is clear. The reason for the omission is undoubtedly due to the fact that the state could not be brought in as a defendant at the time of the last amendment to this section.³

County officers.—It will be observed that section 1058, just quoted, makes special mention of the state and state officers, and while it mentions counties, cities and towns, it omits the mention of any officers of such counties, cities and towns. Under a similar provision in the Practice Act, the supreme court held the statute applicable to the board of supervisors where the county was the real party in interest.⁴ This rule of construction has been applied to this section of the code, and it may now be regarded as settled that no undertaking on appeal is required of an officer of a county, city, or town, when such officer represents his county, city, or town.⁵

§ 143. School Districts and Boards of Education.—School districts are not specifically exempted by section 1058 of the Code of Civil Procedure from the necessity of giving undertakings upon appeal, and as a city is a corporation distinct from that of the school district, even though both are designated by the same name and embrace the same territory, it is held that school districts are not embraced in the exemption of cities. And as the school district is not exempt, the reasoning, by which it is held that county and city officers are exempt though not mentioned in the statute, is inapplicable, and does not extend to officers of school districts so as to exempt them from the necessity of giving an undertaking upon appeal.⁶ A board of education may, however, procure an order of the court pursuant to section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure dispensing with the undertaking.⁷

Form and Sufficiency.

§ 144. In General.—As to the form and sufficiency of the security on appeal, section 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

“The undertaking on appeal must be in writing, and must be executed on the part of the appellant, by at least two sureties, to the effect that the appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him on the appeal, or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding three hundred dollars; or that sum must be deposited with the clerk with whom the judgment or order was entered, to abide the event of the appeal.”

The appellant is given an election to perfect his appeal by giving the undertaking prescribed, or by depositing three hundred dollars in the court below. If he elects to make the deposit, he cannot afterward withdraw the money and substitute an undertaking.⁸

The jurisdiction of the appellate court does not depend upon the sufficiency of the undertaking originally filed. The undertaking is jurisdictional only because it is made so by statute.⁹ And as section 954 of the code authorizes the filing of an undertaking in the appellate court if the original undertaking filed is insufficient,¹⁰ the court has jurisdiction though the original undertaking is insufficient,¹¹ provided the insufficiency is not such that there is in effect no undertaking at all.¹² The respondent however, is in all cases entitled to such an undertaking as is prescribed in section 941, and if the appellant, after notice of a motion to dismiss his appeal for want of such undertaking, fails to present a sufficient undertaking before the hearing of the motion, his appeal will be dismissed, even though the defect be merely insufficiency.¹³ An undertaking on appeal is not required to state the place of residence and occupation of the sureties.¹⁴ Nor is it rendered ineffective by a mistaken indorsement of the title of the cause.¹⁵

Construction.—An appeal bond will be so construed as to carry out the obvious intention of the parties. To effectuate this intention and support the condition of the bond, the court may transpose or reject insensible words.¹⁶

§ 145. Identification of Appeal Generally.—The recitals in an undertaking must identify the appeal which it is intended to support;¹⁷ otherwise it will be deemed to be ambiguous and insufficient.¹⁸ The recital, in substance, is usually as follows:

“Whereas the [plaintiff] A. B. in the above-entitled action has appealed to the [supreme court] from a judgment made and entered against the [plaintiff] in said action in the superior court, in favor of defendant in said action, on the — day of —, —, for — dollars.”

If the undertaking otherwise sufficiently refers to the order from which the appeal is taken, it is not rendered insufficient by a recital that the party “is about to appeal” instead of reciting that he “has appealed” therefrom.¹⁹ But it has been held that an undertaking executed after the filing of a first notice of appeal and prior to the filing of a second notice which recites that the appellant has appealed refers only to the first appeal, and will not support the second appeal.²⁰

taken, and it is probable that an undertaking would be sufficient which states an intention to appeal from a judgment (describing it) without mentioning the court, the practice is to name the court, and there are strong reasons why the court should be mentioned. However this may be, if the court is named, the undertaking must conform to the notice of appeal in this respect, as the sureties cannot be held on such an obligation if the appeal is taken to a different court from that designated. The provision of the constitution requiring the transfer to the proper court of an appeal taken to the wrong court has no application to this question, as that provision applies only when the appeal to a specified appellate court complies with the law relating to appeals to that court in respect of the undertaking precisely as though no other court was in existence.¹

§ 147. Description of Judgment or Order.—In identifying the appeal to which it relates, the undertaking should recite or allude to the judgment or order appealed from.² In this respect the undertaking must, of course, conform to the notice of appeal and recite the same judgment or order mentioned therein.³ If the appeal is from an order on a motion for a new trial, the undertaking is defective if it recites an appeal from the motion for new trial instead of from the order on such motion;⁴ though such defect may be curable under section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁵ But a mistake as to the date of the order or judgment appealed from does not invalidate an undertaking if there is but one order or judgment and one appeal, and the order or judgment is in all other respects correctly described.⁶ And where the undertaking is properly entitled in the cause and correctly states the date of rendition and entry of the judgment, the specification of one item or incident of the judgment cannot invalidate what is otherwise sufficient.⁷

§ 148. Where Several Appeals are Taken.—When several appeals are taken in an action, the several undertakings may be included in the same instrument. Indeed, this has been the common practice in this state from an early period.⁸ The undertaking in such cases must refer to each appeal and show upon its face that it is given in consideration of all of them,⁹ and, of course, it must be in an amount sufficient to embrace each appeal.¹⁰ An undertaking reciting one appeal cannot be made applicable to another. It will be construed to refer only to the appeal recited, and the other will be dismissed as without an undertaking.¹¹

pellant will pay all damages awarded "on the appeal" or "on said appeal" or "such appeal" is ambiguous, and will not support any of the appeals, because it cannot be ascertained therefrom for which appeal it was given.¹² The same is true when an undertaking for three hundred dollars is conditioned generally upon "said appeals."¹³ Such undertakings are not merely insufficient, but are invalid, for any purpose, and the objection cannot be obviated by the filing of a new undertaking under section 954 of the code,¹⁴ though the circumstances may be such as to estop the respondent from raising the objection.¹⁵ This rule is not varied by the fact that one or more orders included in the appeal are not appealable, as the court on the motion to dismiss for want of undertaking cannot look into the record either for the purpose of determining whether the order appealed from is appealable or whether the appeal is without merit.¹⁶ This case, however, is distinguishable from that in which an appeal is taken from a judgment and several nonappealable orders and a single undertaking is given which refers intelligibly to the judgment.¹⁷ On the other hand, when upon an appeal from a judgment and an order the undertaking recites both appeals and specifies a joint and several obligation in the sum of six hundred dollars, for the two appeals or either of them, the undertaking, if not sufficient in form, affords sufficient basis to permit the filing of a new undertaking in the appellate court.¹⁸ And when all the appeals save one have become ineffectual for failure to file an undertaking in time, the undertaking filed will be referred to the appeal in existence, and the presumption that the surety intended to make a valid contract will remove any latent ambiguity that might otherwise have been raised by the fact of there having been two appeals taken.¹⁹

On appeal from a judgment and an order denying a new trial.—The effect of the rule that one undertaking in the sum of three hundred dollars is sufficient to confer jurisdiction of an appeal both from a judgment and from an order denying a new trial is that both appeals are practically one only for the purposes of the undertaking.²⁰ It is essential, of course, that the single undertaking so given shall refer to each of the appeals and show on its face that it is given in consideration of both.¹ But where it recites both appeals and shows that it was given in consideration of both, the undertaking to pay all damages and costs which may be awarded “on the appeal,” fairly construed, holds the sureties for any and all costs and damages that may be awarded on either of the two appeals in consideration of which it is given, and it is sufficient.² Such an undertaking is sufficient also which is conditioned to pay all damages and costs which may be awarded "on the appeals," though the words "or either of them" are omitted after the word "appeals." The promise includes all damages and costs that may accrue on either of the appeals.³

Effect of insufficiency as to one appeal.—Though several undertakings are included in one instrument, they are distinct from each other. The validity of each appeal is to be determined by the undertaking given in support of it, and the insufficiency of the undertaking as to one appeal does not affect the others. Thus a material alteration of the undertaking as to one appeal does not invalidate the other appeals.⁴

§ 149. Names of Parties.—The undertaking on appeal must be executed "on the part of the appellant."⁵ Where several parties join in an appeal, the undertaking should be on the part of all and each of them. On an appeal by several parties, an undertaking which is merely on the part of "the appellant" and promises that "said appellant" will pay all costs is insufficient. Such an undertaking can support only the appeal of a single appellant, and as there is no way of determining which is meant, all of the attempted appeals must fall.⁶ If such undertaking, however, should designate one of the appellants, it would be sufficient as to the party designated. It does not follow that because losing parties shall jointly give notice of their intention to appeal and thereafter one or more shall decline to proceed further, that the appeal of the other parties desirous of prosecuting the matter to a hearing must for this reason be lost.⁷ A converse of this proposition is that in which an appeal is taken by one party and the undertaking thereon purports on its face to be given on an appeal taken by several appellants. Such an undertaking is insufficient to support the appeal, as the sureties standing on the letter of their contract are liable only for damages or costs awarded against the appellants and there is no just appeal.⁸

The code does not require the undertaking to contain the name of the payee, and an omission of a payee is therefore immaterial.⁹ Nor is it necessary that the sureties be named in the body of the undertaking to make it obligatory. The only use of such recital is to show who executed the paper, and the signatures sufficiently show this fact.¹⁰

§ 150. Effect of Condition.—An undertaking on appeal must be to the effect that the appellant “will pay all damages or costs which may be awarded against him on the appeal, or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding three hundred dollars.”¹¹ An undertaking is insufficient if it does not contain the words “or on a dismissal thereof,” as required by the statute.¹² The omission of this stipulation cannot be supplied by a corresponding stipulation in an undertaking to stay execution.¹³ But the omission does not defeat or impair the undertaking in case there should be an affirmance of the judgment, and it follows that the omission amounts to an "insufficiency" only, and the undertaking is curable under section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁴ On an appeal by several parties, a blank in the clause, "which may be awarded against . . . on appeal," renders the undertaking fatally uncertain where the undertaking is executed on the part of the "appellant" only.¹⁵

§ 151. Stay Bond as Appeal Bond.—The undertaking on appeal and the undertaking to stay execution may be in one instrument or several, at the option of the appellant.¹⁶ Although combined in one document, the undertakings must, however, be considered as separate and independent instruments.¹⁷ It so happens that the statute requires the provisions of the undertaking on appeal, with other terms, to be inserted in the undertaking for a stay of execution, yet the former is required for one purpose and the latter for another, and an undertaking filed for the purpose of staying execution cannot take the place of an undertaking on appeal.¹⁸ Upon the same reasoning, omissions in an undertaking on appeal cannot be supplied or cured by the insertion of such stipulations in an undertaking to stay execution, even though both are contained in the same document and the sureties on each are the same.¹⁹ Thus, an omission of a stipulation for the payment of costs and damages "in the event of a dismissal of an appeal" cannot be cured by such a stipulation in an undertaking to stay execution.²⁰ So, also, in a case in which several appeals are taken, uncertainties in the undertaking on appeal as to which appeal the undertaking refers cannot be cured by recitals in the stay undertaking.¹

Execution, Delivery and Filing.

§ 152. Execution Generally.—An undertaking on appeal is an independent contract on the part of the sureties, in which it is not necessary that the appellant should unite. Moreover, the statute provides that the undertaking shall be executed on the part of the appellant; not by him, but by the sureties.² Of course the sureties must sign it,³ and when an undertaking is signed in behalf of a foreign surety company by certain of its officers and has affixed thereto the seal of the corporation, it cannot be held void because not properly signed where there is nothing before the court to show that the officers signing it were not authorized to do so.⁴

When executed.—An undertaking on appeal executed before the rendition or making of the judgment or order to be appealed from is without consideration and will not support an appeal,⁵ and the subsequent interlineation of the date of the judgment or order is such an alteration as avoids the undertaking and discharges the sureties. The respondent is entitled to an undertaking sufficient both in fact and in form, and he is not to be subjected to the necessity of showing that the sureties are liable by reason merely of an estoppel in pais.⁶ An undertaking on appeal may, however, be signed after the entry of the judgment or order and before the taking of an appeal therefrom, and the subsequent appeal is a sufficient consideration to make it a valid and effective obligation whenever it should be filed. The statute does not require that the undertaking shall not be signed by the sureties until after the appeal is taken, or limit any time between the two acts. It merely requires that it shall be filed within five days after the service of the notice of appeal.⁷

§ 153. Delivery and Filing Generally.—The undertaking on appeal is not required by the statute to be delivered to the obligee when executed, but to be filed in the clerk's office for the use and benefit of the adverse party.⁸ The acceptance by the clerk constitutes, in effect, the delivery.⁹ An undertaking has no effect until it is filed, but upon being filed, it becomes an executed and valid obligation upon the sureties.¹⁰

When undertaking is deemed filed.—When section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure speaks of filing the undertaking with the clerk, it means that the undertaking is to be presented to him for filing at his office. Delivering an instrument to the clerk or his deputy at a place other than the office where it is required to be filed is not sufficient, even though the officer indorse it as "filed." It is the duty of the litigant, wherever he may find the officer, to see to it that within the time contemplated by law the paper shall have been deposited in the office. If, however, the appellant procures the officer to accompany him to the clerk's office after office hours and there presents the undertaking for filing, the fraction of the day will be disregarded, and the undertaking will be deemed to have been filed on that day.¹¹

§ 154. Time of Filing.—The Practice Act required the undertaking on appeal to be filed or the deposit made “within five days after the notice of appeal is [was] filed.”¹² While section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as originally enacted, required the undertaking to be filed the same time as the notice of appeal, by an amendment in 1874, this section was changed to the form it bears to-day. This section now provides:

“The appeal is ineffectual for any purpose, unless within five days after service of the notice of appeal an undertaking be filed, or a deposit of money be made with the clerk, as hereinafter provided, or the undertaking be waived by the adverse party in writing.”¹³

These provisions are mandatory, and a compliance therewith is necessary to perfect an appeal,¹⁴ and to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court.¹⁵ The undertaking may be filed at any time within the five days after the service of notice of appeal,¹⁶ but it cannot be filed after the expiration of such time. If not filed within such time, the appeal, in the language of the code, is ineffectual for any purpose,¹⁷ and will be dismissed,¹⁸ unless the time has been extended.¹⁹ Indeed, if more than five days after the service of the notice elapse before the filing of the notice, the undertaking is too late if filed on the day the notice is filed. It has been contended that the filing of the notice with the clerk and its service on the adverse party are parts of a continuous act which as a whole constitutes the service of the notice, and that the undertaking is in time if filed within five days after filing, but this contention is not maintainable, as this code provision clearly distinguishes between the acts of "service" and "filing," and treats them as separate acts.²⁰ If the fifth day falls on Sunday or a holiday, the appellant has until the following day to file his undertaking.¹

Where service is by mail.—Since service by mail is complete at the time of the deposit of the notice in the postoffice, the undertaking must be filed within five days after the deposit. a right is to be exercised or an act done by the adverse party within a given number of days after service, has no application to the filing of an undertaking on appeal, as the act of filing is not to be done by the adverse party but by the appellant himself.²

§ 155. Before Notice of Appeal and After Lapse of Time to Appeal.—Under the Practice Act it was held the filing of a notice of appeal must precede the filing of the undertaking, because until an appeal is taken there is nothing to give effect to the undertaking.³ Under the code, as the time in which to file the undertaking runs from the service of the notice of appeal, it follows that the undertaking cannot be effectual for any purpose if filed before service has been made.⁴ It may, however, be filed before the notice is filed. Since the service of the notice of appeal may precede the filing in point of time,⁵ and since the undertaking must be filed within five days after “service,”⁶ it follows that the undertaking may be filed before the filing of the notice of appeal.⁷

After expiration of time to appeal.—Though an appeal is ineffectual for any purpose until the undertaking is filed, the filing of such undertaking is not one of the required steps to the taking of an appeal. It follows that if notice of appeal is filed and served within the time limited, the undertaking may be filed afterward if filed within five days after service of the notice of appeal.⁸

§ 156. Extension of Time.—Section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the extension of time in which to file an undertaking on appeal, and therefore this section controls section 940 of the same code.⁹ The section, so far as it is pertinent, provides:

“When an act to be done, as provided in this code, relates to . . . the undertakings to be filed, . . . the time allowed by this code, unless otherwise expressly provided, may be extended, upon good cause shown, by the judge of the superior court in and for the county in which the action is pending, or by the judge who presided at the trial of said action; but such extension shall not exceed thirty days, without the consent of the adverse party.”

Prior to 1905, the time in which to except to the sufficiency of the sureties, ran from the “filing of the undertaking.” Under this state of the law, it was the respondent’s duty to watch the files in the clerk’s office for the five days prescribed by statute should he wish to object to the sufficiency. But as he was not required to do so thereafter unless the time in which to file an undertaking was extended by a proper order of court, it was held that any order extending time would convey no notice to him unless presented for filing at the office of the clerk before the expiration of the time for filing the undertaking.¹⁰ In 1905, the statute changed the point from which the time to except to the sureties begins, from "the filing" to the "notice of filing" of the undertaking.¹¹ It has been held that if a notice of appeal is served upon the attorney of a party, a subsequent service upon him in person is a mere nullity, and cannot operate to extend the time to file an undertaking.¹²

Sureties and Justification.

§ 157. In General.—The general statute concerning appeals requires that the undertaking on appeal be executed by at least two sureties.¹³ Section 1056 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the acceptance as sole surety; on undertakings on appeal, of surety companies, both domestic¹⁴ and foreign,¹⁵ that have sufficient paid-up capital and have complied with all the requirements of the statute regulating the formation and admission of such corporations to transact business in the state. Section 616 of the Political Code, forbidding the insurance commissioner from issuing to foreign insurance companies a certificate that the corporation is authorized to transact business in the state until the corporation has first filed in his office the name of an agent and his place of residence in this state on whom summons and other process may be served, is by section 1056 of the Code of Civil Procedure made applicable to corporations executing undertakings on appeal. When a surety company has complied with this statute and filed such designation with the insurance commissioner, it may act as surety, although it may not have filed such designation with the Secretary of State, as required by the act relating to foreign corporations. The certificate of the insurance commissioner is prima facie proof, however, of the compliance of the corporation with the provisions of section 616 of the Political Code.¹⁶

§ 158. Justification.—The justification of sureties has its origin in the fear of the exceptant that the surety may not be financially able to respond upon a breach of the obligation, and its object is to afford the respondent an opportunity to test, by personal examination, the responsibility of the sureties. The justification itself is the proof by the surety of his adequate pecuniary ability. Under California practice this showing is in the first instance required to be made before the presentation of the undertaking by the affidavit of the sureties, that they are each residents and householders or freeholders within the state, and are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking over and above all their just debts, exclusive of property exempt from execution.¹⁷ This affidavit establishes a prima facie justification which suffices in case no exception is taken, but it may be overcome at the instance of, and upon an examination by the exceptant.¹⁸

Waiver and estoppel.—The justification is a right accorded to the adverse party which he may either waive expressly or be debarred from asserting under the well-settled rules of estoppel. Thus, there is a waiver where the justice refused to swear the sureties in justification saying that both he and the exceptant knew them to be good, and the exceptant assented thereto, saying that he only served the notice because directed to do so by his attorney.¹⁹ So, also, a nonappearance on the part of the exceptant is a waiver of the exception.²⁰

§ 159. Proceedings on Justification and Time. Therefor.—A respondent who wishes to object to the sufficiency of the sureties on the undertaking on appeal is required to serve a notice of exception upon the appellant, within thirty days after notice of the filing of the undertaking.¹ The time therefor runs, as just stated, from the notice of the filing of the undertaking, not from service of the notice of appeal,² or from the expiration of the five days after service in which an undertaking is required to be filed.³ Within twenty days after service of notice of such exception, the sureties or other sureties are required to justify “upon five days’ notice to the respondent of the time and place of justification.”⁴ If a justification is attempted without this notice, it is of no avail.⁵ The appellant in his notice of justification should designate an hour at which he will be present with his sureties. If he gives notice of justification on a particular day between the hours of 10 A. M. and 5 P. M., the clerk may properly refuse to take the justification of the sureties before the last hour mentioned in the notice, the opposite party being absent, as the appellant by failing to designate the hour might compel the attendance of the opposite party the entire day in waiting for his appearance.⁶

Before whom.—The sureties, when excepted to, must justify “before a judge of the court below”; that is to say, before a judge of the county where the suit is pending. A justification before a judge of another county is insufficient.⁷

§ 160. Effect of Failure to Justify.—While the Practice Act specifically provided that upon a failure of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal to justify within the time limited, the appeal shall be regarded as if no undertaking had been given,⁸ the code contains no effectual provision for the justification of sureties on an undertaking on appeal. It is true that the sureties may be required to justify under section 948 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁹ But the only consequence of a failure to justify is that the execution is no longer stayed. It is so provided in the code.¹⁰ As it has not provided that the appeal itself shall fail or be dismissed for the mere lack of the prescribed justification, it follows that the appeal is effectual, although the sureties may be found worthless.¹¹

Amendment of or Filing New Undertaking.

§ 161. In General.—The code provides that:

“No appeal can be dismissed for insufficiency of the undertaking, if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by a justice of the supreme court be filed in the supreme court, or (where the appeal is pending before a district court of appeal either by direct appeal thereto or by transfer thereto by the supreme court) if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by a justice of said district court of appeal, be filed in said district court, before the hearing upon motion to dismiss the appeal.¹²

This statute is remedial in nature and should be given a liberal interpretation with a view to further the determination of appeals upon their merits.¹³ It seems, though, that it refers only to appeals to the supreme court or district courts of appeal; not to appeals from justices' courts.¹⁴

When sureties become insufficient.—There is no statute authorizing an appellate court to entertain an application for an order requiring the appellant to file a new appeal bond when the sureties become insufficient, and such an application must be denied.¹⁵ That portion of section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizing a trial court in such case to order a new bond with sufficient sureties evidently relates to the stay bond, as it provides that on failure to give such bond execution may issue.¹⁶

§ 162. Limitations on and Application of Rule.—Section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the giving of a new undertaking only when the undertaking filed is "insufficient." It does not authorize the filing of an undertaking in the appellate court in the first instance. The filing of a new undertaking pursuant to this code

And in the decision of the question whether

a new undertaking may be filed in the superior court, the same distinction has been made between a void undertaking, or one that 'is in reality no undertaking at all,' and one that is merely 'defective' in not fully complying with the requirements of the statute.") See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

section is in the nature of an amendment to a defective proceeding. If no undertaking has been filed, there is nothing to amend.¹⁷ And where two or more appeals are taken and the undertaking filed refers to one only, there is no undertaking on the appeals not referred to, and relief cannot be had under this section.¹⁸

Again, an undertaking may be filed which is so defective as not to constitute any obligation upon the sureties therein, and which is in reality no undertaking at all. In such a case there is more than a mere insufficiency. There is an entire want of indemnity to the respondent, and section 954 has no application and affords no remedy.¹⁹ The mere use of the phrase "insufficiency of undertaking" indicates a distinction between an undertaking which does not fully comply with the terms of section 941 and an entire absence of undertaking.²⁰ To allow a new undertaking to be filed under such circumstances would in effect permit an appeal to be perfected after the time fixed by law.¹ And any undertaking purporting to have been filed in such case is without effect.²

It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a test as to what degree of insufficiency will be tantamount to no bond within the rule. It has been held in a number of cases that if the undertaking fails to identify the judgment it is intended to support, the error is incurable.³ Thus, where several appeals are taken and one undertaking of three hundred dollars is given which does not show to which appeal it applies, the undertaking cannot be considered as applying to either, and is in effect no undertaking at all.⁴ It has been held, however, that the doctrine of these cases should not be stretched to cover cases not fairly within them.⁵ An undertaking is void and in effect no undertaking at all which is executed before the rendition of the judgment appealed from,⁶ or which is filed more than five days after service of notice of appeal.⁷ Where the only undertaking on file purports to have been given pursuant to the sections of the code relating to undertakings to stay execution, there is no undertaking at all.⁸ So, also, an undertaking on appeal from an order on new trial is fatally defective which recites an appeal from the judgment and erroneously states it was rendered on the date of the order appealed from.⁹

On the other hand, the undertaking may be defective in the form in which it is framed, and yet sufficiently indicative of an intent to comply with the terms of the statute as to be binding upon the sureties, or it may be defective in that it indemnifies the respondent against a portion only of the costs and damages that may be awarded him. There is in such cases a mere insufficiency which may be remedied.¹⁰ And it has been held that an undertaking on two appeals properly recited in the undertaking in which the penal sum was six hundred dollars in gross, instead of three hundred dollars for each appeal, is remediable under section 954.¹¹ So, also, it has been held that the following defects constitute an insufficiency merely and are remediable: A misrecital as to the court to which the appeal is taken;¹² an omission of the clause "or on a dismissal thereof";¹³ an informal execution by a surety;¹⁴ and a defect in the affidavit of the sureties in omitting to state that they are residents or householders or freeholders as required by the code.¹⁵ A mistake in the title of the action, if material, is curable where the undertaking names the court and department thereof, gives the number of the cause and accurately describes the judgment.¹⁶

§ 163. Proceedings and Time Therefor.—The undertaking to be filed pursuant to section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure must have indorsed thereon the approval of the justice of the court in which the appeal is pending.¹⁷ And it has been held that the approval by a justice of the appellate court of an undertaking substituted for one held insufficient, amounts to a determination that the undertaking is such in form and substance as the statute requires, and also that the sureties are sufficient. Time of filing undertaking.—Section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a limitation upon the discretion of the appellate court to allow the filing of new undertakings,¹⁹ and the court cannot allow the filing of a new undertaking on or after the hearing of a motion to dismiss upon this ground. The party must avail himself of the privilege granted him by the statute before the hearing of a motion, as he cannot contest the motion, and then claim the privilege, if the motion is decided against him. An application made at that time comes too late.²⁰

Alternative method.—Section 941b, relating to appeals by the new and alternative method, originally allowed the filing of the notice of appeal within sixty days after notice of entry of the judgment or order appealed from, or at the latest within six months after entry.³ In 1915 this act was amended by eliminating the provision relating to notice of appeal, and by shortening the time in which to appeal in all cases to sixty days after entry of judgment. As amended, this code section provides:

165 Cal. 429, 132 Pac. 760; Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co., 30 Cal. App. Dec. 828 (judgment of non-suit). See infra, § 224, as to time to appeal if the appellant desires to preserve the lien of an attachment.

Before 1907, the section of the code limiting the time in which to appeal from the judgment provided that an exception to the decision or verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence could not be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment unless the appeal was taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment. This act was amended in 1907 by substituting the word "entry" for the word "rendition." As thus amended, it continued to exist until 1915, when it was repealed. This provision did not have the effect of changing the time within which to appeal from the judgment, but was merely a limitation upon the matters that might be considered on the appeal. *Dennis v. “This notice [of appeal] may be filed at any time after the rendition of the judgment, order or decree, but the same must be filed within sixty days after entry of said judgment, order or decree. If proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending, the time for appeal from the judgment shall not expire until thirty days after entry in the trial court of the order determining such motion for a new trial, or other termination in the trial court of the proceedings upon such motion.”

Orders and judgments in probate.—The time for an appeal from orders and judgments in probate proceedings is prescribed in section 1715 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

“The appeal may be taken at any time after the order, decree, or judgment is made or rendered, but not later than sixty days after the same is entered in the minute-book of the court, etc.”⁴

Section 1664, relating to proceedings in the nature of an action to determine heirship, requires that all appeals therein must be taken within sixty days from the date of the entry of the judgment or order complained of.⁵

§ 165. Necessity of Compliance With Statute.—One intending to take an appeal must comply with the provisions of the code prescribing the time for the exercise of the right, as such statutes are jurisdictional and mandatory. If an appeal is not taken within the time limited by

ure to state it in a motion to dismiss.⁸ On the contrary, when it appears that an appeal was taken too late, it is the duty of the appellate court to notice the defect and dismiss the appeal on its own motion.⁹ There is, therefore, no force in a contention that an objection that an appeal was taken after the expiration of the statutory period is waived by the action of the respondent in indorsing upon the notice of appeal an admission of service.¹⁰ Such act cannot operate as an estoppel preventing the respondent from raising the objection, as the acts of the parties cannot confer jurisdiction on the court in a case withheld by the law from its jurisdiction.¹¹ In a case where several appeals are taken, the appellate court without formally dismissing such appeals as are tardy will limit its consideration to those which are timely.¹²

dered or made. And so it is a rule that such an appeal is premature and should be dismissed.¹³ While formerly, the time within which to appeal began to run from the time of the rendition of a judgment,¹⁴ under the present procedure, the time runs from the entry of judgment.¹⁵ The judgment is final for the purposes of an appeal as soon as it is entered,¹⁶ and an appeal may be taken within the statutory period after entry, although more than the statutory period after the judge has announced or rendered the judgment.¹⁷ That the term "entry" in the statute limiting the time in which to appeal is used in contradistinction to the word "rendition" is made clear by the history of the statute. Prior to the code, the Practice Act authorized an appeal to be taken from a judgment within one year after the rendition of the judgment. Under this act, the time for an appeal commenced to run from the "rendition" of a judgment;¹⁸ and the failure of the clerk to enter the judgment in the judgment-book at the time it was rendered could not have the effect of extending the time to appeal.¹⁹ The legislature must be presumed to have been familiar with these decisions, and therefore, when it adopted the definitions which the courts gave to these two words by substituting one for the other, it must be presumed to have intended that the starting point for computing the time to appeal should be changed from the date of the "rendition" of the judgment or order to the date of "entry" in the book wherein it was required by law to be entered.²⁰

Holidays.—If the last day in which to take an appeal falls on a holiday, it is excluded under section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the appeal may be taken on the following day.¹ Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a limited kind of a holiday for Saturdays from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock midnight. But it has been distinctly held that Saturdays are not holidays within the meaning of section 12.²

§ 167. Necessity for Entry of Judgment or Order.—The fact that an appeal is taken intermediate the rendition of a judgment and entry is no longer fatal. Section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to appeals by the alternative method, adopted in 1907, provides that the notice of appeal may be filed "at any time after the rendition of the judgment, order or decree." This amendment was followed in 1915 by a corresponding amendment of section 939 of the code, providing that no appeal shall be dismissed on the ground that it was taken after the rendition of the judgment or order and before formal entry. Likewise, in 1911, section 1715 of the code was amended so as to authorize the taking of appeals in probate proceedings "at any time after the order, decree or judgment is made or rendered."³

3. Estate of Stone, 173 Cal. 675, 161 Pac. 258. This amendment was undoubtedly brought about by the decision in Estate of Dunphy,

Prior to the adoption of these amendments appeals were frequently dismissed where they were taken prior to the entry of a judgment or order, though after the rendition thereof, since, under the code provisions as formerly worded, there could be no right to take an appeal until such entry had been made, an appeal taken prior to such time was deemed premature, and conferred no jurisdiction on the appellate court.⁴ The defect being jurisdictional, it was held that the respondent could not waive it,⁵ or be precluded from urging it as a ground for dismissal by circumstances amounting to an estoppel.⁶

Moreover, the court would, of its own motion, dismiss the appeal when the fact appeared that it was prematurely taken.⁷

§ 168. Character and Sufficiency of Entry.—Section 668 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the entry by the clerk of judgments in the judgment-book,⁸ includes, by its terms, all final judgments in civil actions,⁹ except such as to which special provision is made elsewhere.¹⁰ A judgment is “entered” within the meaning of this code section when it is actually entered in the judgment-book.¹¹ It is not to be deemed entered when the attorney requests the clerk to enter it,¹² or when it is merely entered in the minutes of the court.¹³ Moreover, the act of the clerk in compiling the judgment-roll does not start the statute of limitations running,¹⁴ for the code expressly requires such act to be done by the clerk “immediately after entering the judgment.”¹⁵

In determining whether a judgment has been entered, an appellant can rely only upon the actual entry of the judgment or order in the proper place. An entry in the clerk’s register of actions noting an entry of decree in the minutes, and having reference only to an entry by the courtroom clerk in his rough daily minutes of proceedings is not such an entry as could be conclusive in favor of the appellant that the decree had been finally entered.¹⁶ And upon the same principle, a certificate of a clerk upon a copy of a decree that the decree was then on file and of record in the clerk's office does not justify the assumption that the decree has been entered at large.¹⁷ This rule, however, has lost considerable of its force since the amendments of the code providing in effect that appeals taken after rendition and before entry of a judgment are well taken.¹⁸

Effect of correction or amendment of judgment.—Where there is a mere correction of a clerical error in the judgment and not the entry of a new decree, the time in which to appeal dates from the original entry of the decree, and not from the date of the correction.¹⁹ But if proceedings to amend a judgment are instituted, the judgment rendered thereon is in effect a new decree and is the only appealable decree. An appeal taken therefrom within sixty days after it is entered is in time, although more than sixty days from the original judgment. The date the modified decree is entered must be taken as the true date of entry.²⁰ Indeed, an appeal taken from the original judgment pending such proceedings would be premature.¹

Effect of errors in entry.—There is no statute expressly authorizing the making of a memorial of the terms of an order of the superior court by the method of writing it on a separate piece of paper and having the judge attach his signature thereto, though it has become customary in many instances. And where such a memorial is made, the fact that there are some slight discrepancies between the filed order and the entry in the minute-book does not affect the validity of the minute-entry, or extend the time to appeal until another entry is made.²

§ 169. Judgments of Dismissal—Decrees and Orders in Probate.—The code makes special provision for judgments dismissing actions when a party fails (a) to appear on the trial and the other party appears and asks for a dismissal;³ (b) when upon the trial and before the final submission of the case, the plaintiff abandons it;⁴ and (c) when the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury and the defendant moves for a nonsuit.⁵ The dismissals in these cases must be made, the code provides, by orders of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and are effective for all purposes when so entered.⁶ By virtue of this provision, the minutes of the court is the proper place for the entry of judgments of dismissal in the cases mentioned, and an appeal may be taken when the judgment or order is so entered, though it is not entered in the judgment-book.⁷ This rule does not, however, apply to a judgment on a demurrer, though the judgment declares that the action be dismissed, for whether a judgment on demurrer declares that the plaintiff take nothing, or that the action abate, or that the action be dismissed, it is a final judgment on the pleadings of the relative rights of the parties so far as the particular action is concerned; and, therefore, no appeal lies from such a judgment until it is entered in the judgment-book.⁸

Entry of order for nonsuit.—The entry of an order for nonsuit which does not purport to be a judgment of any kind, but only a memorandum from which data for a judgment might be drawn, is not the entry contemplated by the code. The time for appeal does not run in such case until the entry of a proper judgment of nonsuit which operates as a final disposition of the case.⁹

Judgments or orders in probate proceedings.—The code provides that all probate orders and judgments must be entered at length in the minute-book of the court.¹⁰ It is from the entry under this provision that the time runs in which to appeal from judgments and orders in such proceedings.¹¹

§ 170. Entry Nunc Pro Tunc.—It is well established that where a judgment has been rendered and its entry omitted, it may be subsequently entered, and, if justice requires, may be made to take effect nunc pro tunc as of the date when it was actually made.¹² The rights of the parties in respect to an appeal are determined, however, by the date of the actual entry of the judgment; and it is clear that the court cannot by antedating an order or entry of it cut off the right of appeal,¹³ or limit that right.¹⁴ Thus, a party defendant who is not mentioned in a judgment may take an appeal within sixty days after the actual entry of an order correcting the record. The fact that such order is made nunc pro tunc cannot operate to defeat his right of appeal. Indeed, he could not have appealed from the judgment originally entered because not mentioned therein.¹⁵ The time in which to institute proceedings for review cannot commence to run until the decision is actually rendered,—i. e., until the findings are actually filed,—regardless of the day as of which they are filed.¹⁶ And when appeals taken before entry were deemed premature, an appeal taken before the actual entry of a judgment but after the date as of which the judgment was entered was held premature.¹⁷

Extension of Time.

§ 171. In General.—The code provisions limiting the time in which to appeal are mandatory,¹⁸ and the time limited cannot be extended by the court, or by any circumstances,¹⁹ except by the pendency of proceedings on motion for a new trial.²⁰ The time limited cannot be enlarged by the device of moving to vacate or set aside a judgment or order, and then appealing from the order on the motion.¹ Neither can the time to appeal from an order be enlarged by a subsequent order vacating, and then reinstating it, for the reason that on the appeal from the order itself the subsequent orders form no part of the record and cannot be considered.²

By order of court.—Since the statutes limiting the time of appeal are jurisdictional and mandatory, it follows that, in the absence of an express authorization in the statute itself, a court has no power to extend the time for taking an appeal, or relieve an appellant from the effect of misfortune, accident, surprise or mistake. No such authorization is found in the statutes of this state.³ Indeed, section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure, authorizing the judge to extend the time in which various acts including the service of notices may be done, expressly excepts from its provisions notices of appeal.⁴ The court cannot extend the time of appeal even in the case of the death of a party, though the effect thereof may be to preclude an appeal from the judgment or order complained of.⁵ Neither may the court, in such case, deduct from the statutory time the period intervening between the death of the party and the appointment of a personal representative, for it is a well-settled rule and principle of law, except as modified by positive enactment, that when the statute of limitations has begun to run, no subsequent disability will suspend its operation.⁶

By mailing notice of appeal.—The time in which to appeal is not extended by the mailing of the notice of appeal. Though section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that where service is made by mail, if the adverse party may exercise a right within a certain number of days after such service, the time within which such right may be exercised is extended one day for every twenty-five miles of the distance between the place of deposit and the place of address, it does not authorize any extension of the time within which a paper may be filed, or within which the service of a paper may be made upon the adverse party.⁷

§ 172. By Stipulation of the Parties.—The time within which a notice of appeal may be filed is fixed by law, and cannot be enlarged by stipulation of the parties.⁸ Counsel cannot even vary the time in which to appeal by a stipulation as to the date of the entry of the judgment or order appealed from, especially when there is no element of estoppel involved which would render it inequitable to disregard the stipulation.⁹ The court is not bound by the stipulations of the parties,¹⁰ but will itself calculate the time to appeal from the date of the actual entry of the order in question. Furthermore, a stipulation cannot operate to confer jurisdiction, but only as an agreement that the facts recited in the record are correct, which facts, and not the stipulation, must be examined to determine whether jurisdiction exists.¹¹ When, however, the record shows that the judgment or decree was entered and the parties stipulate to the correctness of the record, it has been held that counsel for the respondent will not be allowed to impeach the record by showing that the entry was made at another and different date subsequent to the taking of the appeal. The stipulation in such case is merely an agreement that the facts recited in the record are correct.¹²

§ 173. By Motion for New Trial.—Sections 939 and 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1915, provide:

The proceeding on motion for new trial referred to in this provision is the proceeding covered by sections 656 to 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁴ The purpose of this extension of time is to enable a party to have reviewed on appeal from a judgment, the failure or refusal of the trial court to grant his motion for new trial—amendments of our laws in other respects made at the same time as this section was amended having the effect of abolishing the right of appeal from an order denying a new trial which theretofore existed.¹⁵ This provision is applicable to appeals from orders in probate proceedings.¹⁶

The time to appeal is not extended if such proceeding is unauthorized, as where it is sought to obtain a re-examination of a motion,¹⁷ or where it is not instituted within the time limited by law for the institution of such proceedings.¹⁸ But if the proceeding is duly initiated within the time limited therefor, it is pending within the meaning of the statute, though the motion is without merit,¹⁹ or the notice of intention is not served upon an adverse party.²⁰ Such objections, while good ground for denying the motion, do not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to hear and determine it. While a losing party has ten days after receiving notice of entry of judgment in which to move for a new trial, it does not follow that if such notice is not served, he might indefinitely extend the time of appeal by waiting until he is served. Though he need not move for a new trial until he has received such notice, he is not required to wait, but may give notice of intention to move for a new trial at any time after judgment, and thereby extend the time to appeal. If he does not move for a new trial within the time in which he may appeal from the judgment, there is no proceeding for new trial pending within the meaning of the code, and the privilege of appealing from the judgment, or of having a new trial order reviewed on appeal terminates.¹

This section provides (quoting in part) that:

“The power of the court to pass on motion for new trial shall expire within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the decision of the court. this section of the code.² The trial court has no power to pass upon the motion thereafter, and subsequent orders purporting to dispose of it are inoperative, and do not affect the time to appeal.³ The appeal must be taken within thirty days after the expiration of such three months' period, and if so taken, it is in time. Whether section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing for the exclusion of the last day if it be a holiday, is applicable to this section has not been expressly determined.⁴

G. EFFECT OF APPEAL.

I. UPON JUDGMENT OR ORDER APPEALED FROM.

§ 176. Vacating Judgment or Order.—An appeal from a judgment or order of a superior court does not have the effect of vacating the judgment or order from which the appeal is taken. The code does not provide that an order appealed from shall cease to exist—be annulled—but that it cannot be enforced by a proceeding upon it.⁵ It follows, therefore, that an appeal from an order setting aside a judgment does not vacate the order and revive the judgment. The judgment no longer exists, so far as the assertion of any rights under it is concerned, until it shall be brought into force again by a reversal of the order setting it aside.⁶

In accordance with this rule, an appeal from an order setting aside the satisfaction of a judgment does not restore the entry of satisfaction. The judgment stands precisely as though the order satisfying it had never been made, and the party in whose favor it is given may proceed upon it, at the sole peril of the appeal from the order of vacation;⁷ an appeal from a judgment dissolving an attachment does not revive the attachment;⁸ and so, also, an appeal from a decree denying an injunction or dissolving a preliminary injunction does not suspend the decree or revive the injunction.⁹ But the trial court, at the time of rendering judgment for the defendant, has equitable jurisdiction either to continue in force a preliminary injunction pending an appeal by the plaintiff or to make an original order at that time restraining the successful party from interfering with the appellant's property pending such appeal.¹⁰

Judgment removing officers.—It is well settled that an appeal from an order removing an executor or administrator does not revive or restore his powers. He remains suspended from office pending the appeal;¹¹ and though the court may appoint a special administrator during the period of suspension, it cannot appoint a general administrator until such order of removal becomes final, as the question as to who shall be general administrator is involved in the appeal.¹² This same rule applies to an order removing a guardian.¹³ A different rule obtains, however, where the officer or officers removed be a sheriff, a board of supervisors, or the like. In such case it has been held that the appeal restores the officer to his rights of office until its final determination.¹⁴

§ 177. Upon Finality of Judgment.—The code expressly declares that an action is deemed pending while an appeal from the judgment is pending.¹⁵ Although a judgment may be final with reference to the trial court which rendered it, and, as such, be the subject of an appeal,¹⁶ yet it is not a final determination of the rights of the parties pending its review upon appeal.¹⁷ A judgment, in order to be admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving facts therein recited, must be a final judgment in a cause. Hence, it has been repeatedly held that the operation of a final judgment is suspended by an appeal therefrom, so that pending such appeal the judgment is not admissible in another case as evidence, even between the same parties.¹⁸ Under this rule a judgment is not admissible in bar of another action on the same cause of action or relating to the same subject matter, pending an appeal therefrom.¹⁹ The justice of this rule is apparent from the fact that an appealable

Excepting when ordered by supersedeas or permitted by stay bond, an appeal from an order denying a new trial, under the former practice, in no way suspended the judgment nor interfered with its finality. It was in this respect more in the nature of an equitable bill of review which, while countenanced in proper cases even after a judgment of affirmance upon appeal, never operated in and of itself to suspend the decree. The decision which the court renders on such appeal is not upon the judgment, but upon the order appealed from, and while the effect of its reversal of the order will, of course, be necessarily the setting aside of the judgment, this is but an incident to the ruling which it makes, which ruling goes not at all to the sufficiency or finality of the judgment, but only as to whether, within familiar rules and limitation, the judgment was fairly given. judgment might be reversed, after having been used to perpetually bar an action.²⁰

The rule does not, however, preclude the use of the judgment for any purpose whatsoever.¹ It may be offered in evidence whenever the mere fact that it has been entered is material, as, for instance, to show the regularity of an execution,² or in support of a plea in abatement.³ But as such a plea can be sustained only when the plaintiffs in the action and the cause of action are the same,⁴ a better mode to avoid an unjust conclusion, in general, is to move for a continuance until the final determination of the suspended judgment, when it can be used as evidence.⁵ The judgment may also be used to establish an indirect or contingent right. For instance, in a suit to quiet title, the title of the plaintiff may be quieted, subject to a claim of the defendant under a judgment from which an appeal is pending.⁶

§ 178. In General.—The service and filing of a proper notice of appeal from final judgment in an action transfers the action from the superior court to the appellate court,⁷ and divests the superior court of further jurisdiction in the cause except as to matters not affected by the judgment or order appealed from.⁸ The trial court has no longer any power or control over the action,⁹ and cannot proceed further as to matters embraced in the judgment until the appeal is heard and determined and its jurisdiction is restored.¹⁰ It cannot change the order appealed from,¹¹ or make any other order or do any other act in the case materially affecting the order appealed from.¹² After an appeal has been taken, the trial court below has no authority to make new or further findings in the cause in regard to the matters involved,¹³ or ren-

Injunctions pending appeal.—Though the trial court in denying an injunction has power by provisional injunction to maintain the status quo pending appeal,¹⁸ it has no power to make orders modifying the injunction after the perfection of an appeal.¹⁹

When jurisdiction is transferred.—The appellate court acquires jurisdiction immediately upon the perfecting of the appeal from the trial court, though the record is not filed therein until later.²⁰ It follows from the principles stated that a superior court has no power to dismiss an appeal taken from its judgments or orders;¹ and it cannot make an order forbidding the clerk to certify to a proposed transcript.²

the validity or correctness of such judgment or order.⁴ The trial court has not power thereafter to amend or correct its judgment or order,⁵ or to vacate or set it aside.⁶ Such power cannot be reinvested in the trial court even by the consent of the parties.⁷ Of course, circumstances can be imagined under which a power in the trial court to change a judgment or order while an appeal is pending can be wisely used; for example, in a divorce case for the welfare of children. from a judgment or order is purely a matter of statutory regulation to be determined by a construction of the statute under which the appeal is taken. If the terms of the statute are clear and not ambiguous, the courts are obliged to enforce it, though it may be of the opinion that such enforcement will be attended with evil consequences.⁸

Enforcement of judgment.—An appeal without supersedeas does not suspend the power of the trial court to issue execution.⁹ And pending an appeal without stay bond from a judgment in a replevin suit, the plaintiff has the right to require the defendant to deliver the property in compliance with the terms of the judgment.¹⁰

A superior court does not have general power to stay the execution of its judgments after the perfection of an appeal therefrom,¹¹ though it seems to have the power to compel the sheriff to observe the stay of execution given by statute.¹²

§ 180. Over Collateral Matters.—It is provided by the code that notwithstanding the perfection of an appeal and stay of all proceedings upon the judgment or order appealed from and matters embraced therein, the superior court may nevertheless “proceed upon any other matter embraced in the action and not affected by the order appealed from.”¹³ Hence, an appeal does not operate to divest a trial court of jurisdiction to hear and determine questions arising in proceedings independent of and collateral to the proceeding wherein the judgment or order appealed from was rendered.¹⁴ It does not, for example, deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to entertain a motion for new trial,¹⁵ to settle a bill of exceptions,¹⁶ or to issue a commission to take the deposition of a witness with a view to its use upon a new trial of the action if one is awarded on the appeal.¹⁷ Pursuant to this rule, an appeal from a decree of divorce does not deprive a trial court of jurisdiction to make an order for alimony;¹⁸ and appeal from an order granting general letters of administration does not affect the jurisdiction of the court over a distinct proceeding of special administration to preserve the estate until general letters are granted.¹⁹ Where a receiver is appointed to protect property until the judgment, his functions cease with the judgment, and the trial court has jurisdiction pending an appeal from the judgment to entertain a motion to discharge him.²⁰

§ 181. On Power to Entertain Motion for New Trial.—Proceedings on a motion for a new trial are not in direct line of the judgment, but are independent and collateral thereto. Therefore, an appeal from a judgment does not divest a trial court of jurisdiction to hear and determine a motion for new trial.¹ This rule is unchanged by the amendments of 1915 denying appeals from orders on motion for new trial except in one instance, and authorizing a review of such orders on an appeal from the judgment. To hold that the proceeding on motion for new trial is independent where an appeal is allowed, and dependent in cases where an appeal is denied and the order is reviewable on appeal from the judgment would cause considerable confusion, and it has been held that in all cases the trial court is authorized to entertain a motion for new trial pending an appeal from the judgment.²

On the motion for new trial, the trial court has jurisdiction, notwithstanding the appeal, to insist upon the acceptance of a modification of the judgment as a condition of refusing a new trial, for the reason that this is a proper order in the proceeding for new trial.³ If the court should reduce the judgment pursuant to an acceptance of a conditional order denying a new trial, such order is not the entry of a new judgment. It does not destroy an appeal from the judgment already taken, nor necessitate the taking of a new appeal from the judgment as so reduced.⁴

§ 182. Over Court Records.—While a trial court by an appeal loses jurisdiction of a cause for the purposes of an appeal, it does not thereby lose jurisdiction of its records. These remain within its physical custody and control, and it has the right after an appeal is taken as before to correct clerical mistakes appearing upon the face of the record.⁵ In a case where the clerk of the court inadvertently enters findings delivered to him for the judge, as the judgment of the court, before the judge has seen or examined them, the rule is given that the trial court has power to set aside such purported judgment, although an appeal has been taken therefrom.⁶ Such amendments do not make any change in the judicial action of the court, and make no change in the orders appealed from, but merely correct a misprision of the clerk in entering the order and make the record state the truth.⁷ So, also, the taking of an appeal does not impair the power of the trial court to supply the place of its records when lost, by the aid of copies or some other means under its control.⁸

§ 183. When Appeal is from Interlocutory Order.—An appeal from an interlocutory order does not divest the trial court of its jurisdiction over the remainder of the case not involved in the appeal.⁹ For example, an appeal from an order relating to the accounts of a trustee before a specified date does not divest a trial court of jurisdiction to make orders in reference to accounts subsequent thereto.¹⁰ On like principle, it has been held that, pending an appeal by the plaintiff from an order dissolving an attachment as to one defendant, the trial court can entertain a motion to dissolve by another defendant.¹¹ And further, though an injunction pendente lite preventing the interference with possession of property is appealable and a stay bond prevents such change of possession pending appeal, yet such appeal does not preclude the court from proceeding to final decree.¹²

§ 184. Effect of Void Appeal.—An appeal which is absolutely void does not remove the cause from the superior court or divest it of jurisdiction. In such case the cause remains in the trial court as undisturbed as though no attempt had been made to remove it to a higher court.¹³ For example, the taking of an appeal before the rendition of judgment does not deprive the trial court of power to render judgment.¹⁴ Likewise, the taking of an appeal from a judgment pending proceedings to correct or amend the findings and judgment is premature, and does not divest the trial court of power to correct its judgment.¹⁵ But, as it is presumed that an attorney acting for a party has authority to do so, the trial court cannot treat an appeal as void because of want of authority in the attorney to take the appeal. The place to assail a purported appeal because of such lack of authority is in the appellate court.¹⁶

H. SUPERSEDEAS AND STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

I. INTRODUCTORY.

§ 185. Definition and Nature.—A supersedeas is a suspension of the power of the court below to issue an execution on a judgment or decree from which an appeal has been taken, or, if a writ of execution has issued, it is a prohibition emanating from the court of appeal against the execution of the writ.¹⁷ Its object is to stay proceedings in the court below upon a judgment or order appealed from, and to suspend the enforcement of that judgment or order until the determination of the appeal.¹⁸ Originally, at common law a supersedeas was a writ directed to a ministerial officer commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute or which might come into his hands.¹⁹ In modern times, the term is often used synonymously with a stay of proceedings, and is employed to designate the effect of an act or proceeding which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment. For example, the Code of Civil Procedure declares that in certain cases the perfecting of an appeal by the giving of a stay bond, and in a generality of cases the perfecting of an appeal by giving a three hundred dollar undertaking on appeal, stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from. In other words, the perfection of an appeal creates a statutory supersedeas.²⁰ There is in this state also a supersedeas upon order of court or upon a writ of supersedeas. This writ is an auxiliary process designed to supersede the enforcement of the judgment brought up for review.¹ It may issue where the trial court or its officers seek to enforce its judgment in violation of a statutory supersedeas effectuated by an appeal or stay bond as the case may be.² It may issue, also, where the statute makes no pro-

§ 186. Necessity of Appellate Proceedings.—A supersedeas or stay of proceedings upon a judgment, herein discussed, is an incident to the appeal in which such supersedeas or stay is sought. Being merely an incident to an appeal, it follows that there can be no supersedeas or stay if an appeal is void, either because the order from which the appeal is taken is not an appealable order,⁴ or because the appeal was prematurely taken,⁵ or because it is otherwise void.⁶ When, however, a motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that the order appealed from is not an appealable order is continued until the hearing of the appeal on the merits, it is the duty of the superior court to refrain from its enforcement pending the motion to dismiss.⁷ The refusal to dismiss is as effectual for the purposes of supersedeas as if determined for all purposes. Its effect is that the appellate court is thus far entertaining the appeal.⁸

II. UPON SECURITY.

When is Security Required.

§ 187. In General.—It is a general rule in California that the perfecting of an appeal by giving a three hundred dollar undertaking creates a statutory supersedeas and stays proceedings upon the judgment or order appealed from.⁹ In certain exceptional cases a supersedeas can be had only upon giving security, in addition to the ordinary appeal bond, either an undertaking to stay execution,¹⁰ or a deposit in the trial court of the amount of the judgment appealed from, and three hundred dollars in addition,—unless the undertaking or deposit be waived by the written consent of the respondent.¹¹ These exceptional cases include a judgment or order directing the payment of money,¹² a judgment or order directing the assignment or delivery of documents or personal property,¹³ a judgment or order appointing a receiver,¹⁴ a judgment or order directing the sale of personal property upon the foreclosure of a mortgage thereon,¹⁵ a judgment or order directing the execution of a conveyance or other instrument,¹⁶ and a judgment or order directing the sale or delivery of possession of real property.¹⁷ Construing sections 942 to 945, inclusive, it has been held and it must now be taken as absolutely settled by the decisions that these sections apply only to cases where the appellant has money or other property in his possession which has been adjudged by the lower court to belong to the respondent, or where the appellant has been directed to do some act for the benefit of the respondent, and where it would be unjust to allow the appellant to retain the possession of the property and perhaps dissipate it, or put it out of his power to perform the act required, without securing the respondent by a bond.¹⁸ For example, section 943 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to judgments directing the sale of personal property upon the foreclosure of a mortgage thereon, does not apply to a judgment foreclosing a pledge, for the reason that in the case of a pledge, the pledgor has done all that could be done to transfer and assign the property as security for the indebtedness. It follows that such a judgment may be stayed by an undertaking for three hundred dollars under section 941 of the code.¹⁹ Similar considerations are applicable to other judgments under the statutory exceptions.²⁰

The ordinary undertaking on appeal and an undertaking to stay proceedings on a judgment are distinct from each other. The former is necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the court of appeals¹, while the latter is not jurisdictional, but is only given to preserve the appellant the benefits of his appeal.² It is optional with an appellant whether to file an undertaking to stay proceedings and obtain a supersedeas.³

§ 188. When Judgment Directs Payment of Money.—Section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that “if the appeal be from a judgment or order directing the payment of money, it does not stay the execution of the judgment or order unless” the undertaking therein prescribed be given to secure to the judgment creditor the fruits of the judgment in the event of its affirmance or of the dismissal of the appeal.⁴ This section applies only to a judgment which directs the payment by the appellant of a specific amount of money, and which can be directly enforced by a writ of execution.⁵ It has no application to a judgment which may be satisfied in either of two or more modes,⁶ such as a judgment in an action of claim and delivery which is in the alternative, primarily for the return of the property and incidentally for the value thereof if a return cannot be had.⁷ Nor does this statute apply to a judgment which cannot be enforced against the defendant until after the plaintiff has exhausted another remedy, and where he is personally liable for only a deficiency in the proceeds of certain property primarily chargeable therefor.⁸ And it is not applicable where the fund in litigation is not in the possession of the appellant but is in the possession of the court at the time of the rendition of the judgment and the taking of the appeal.⁹

Judgment for costs.—A judgment for costs is not a judgment for money contemplated by section 942. If it were, a stay bond would be required in almost every conceivable case, when, to the contrary, it is required only in the cases covered by sections 942 to 945 of the code.¹⁰ So, also, the fact that costs are awarded does not characterize a judgment which would not otherwise be deemed a money judgment.¹¹ An order refusing to strike out a cost bill is not an order directing the payment of money, but is in effect a denial of a motion to modify a judgment, and any execution issued must be founded on the judgment, not the order denying the motion.¹²

In miscellaneous proceedings.—A judgment for alimony which by its terms is made a lien upon certain real estate and directs the appointment of a receiver of said realty to pay the alimony out of the income thereof as it accrues does not direct the payment of any money to the plaintiff and is not enforceable by execution against other estate of the defendant within the rule.¹³ The same is true of a judgment foreclosing liens against a vessel which does not direct the entry of a personal judgment.¹⁴ So, also, a judgment of condemnation in eminent domain proceedings prior to the expiration of the thirty day period in which the plaintiff is required to pay the amount assessed, as such judgment is not directly enforceable by execution within the rule, but is rather a conditional award upon payment of the price for the land.¹⁵ An order under section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure granting leave to have execution issued after the lapse of five years cannot be regarded as a judgment directing the payment of money, even though it purports to direct the payment of money. Any such direction is without authority and void and does not characterize the order. Since section 942 does not embrace such order itself, it does not embrace an order denying a motion to vacate such order, as such order is purely negative.¹⁶ Other instances will be noted later where judgments are not deemed to be within the scope of any of the statutory exceptions, and hence, of course, not within the contemplation of section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁷

does not apply to a case where the fund in question is in the possession of the court,¹⁹ it clearly includes an order requiring a sheriff to deliver documents or personal property,²⁰ and an order directing an insolvent to turn over certain assets to a receiver in insolvency proceedings.¹ Under this section a defendant in a claim and delivery suit is required to give a stay bond,² even though he may have given a redelivery bond under section 514 of the Code of Civil Procedure.³ A decree enjoining a partner who had unlawfully excluded the plaintiff from the premises occupied by a firm from interfering with the plaintiff in the exercise of his rights and duties as managing partner is in effect a decree directing a delivery of the possession of real and personal property within the meaning of section 943 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁴

While it was intimated in an early case that the term "personal property" as used in this statute does not include money,⁵ the term undoubtedly includes money where it is a special fund capable of identification.⁶

erty," the execution of the same cannot be stayed, unless the undertaking therein specified shall be given. Under this section, a stay bond is necessary to effectuate a stay when the judgment or order appealed from requires the plaintiff in a condemnation proceeding to restore the possession of the premises to the owner,⁷ or where it is a judgment foreclosing a lien,⁸ provided the appeal is taken by one in possession of the premises or required by the judgment to do some act.⁹ It has been held that section 945 of the code requires an undertaking against the commission of waste, and for the value of the use and occupation. But this statute is clearly inapplicable where the property at the time of the judgment and appeal is in the actual possession of the court by its receiver,¹⁰ although it would include a case where a receiver of the rents and profits is appointed in a foreclosure suit and where, notwithstanding the appointment, the mortgagor and his tenant remain in actual possession of the mortgaged premises.¹¹ Moreover, this section has no application where the premises are in the control of the respondent, or someone other than the appellant. A judgment directing the sale of real property in satisfaction of a purchaser's lien is governed by section 945 where the defendant vendor is in possession. But where the vendee is himself in exclusive possession of the premises, the clauses of the statute requiring an undertaking to secure to him the damages by waste and the value of the use and occupation are inapplicable.¹² So, also, on an appeal from a judgment foreclosing a mechanic's lien by a holder of a subordinate lien not in possession, the perfection of the appeal by the three hundred dollar undertaking operates as a stay.¹³ But, as will be shown later on, when the judgment is for the sale under a mortgage and payment of a deficiency, if a stay is desired, a bond providing for deficiency must be given by all appellants, whether or not they are in possession.¹⁴

§ 191. Cases Belonging to Two or More Classes.—A judgment may give different kinds of relief or be embraced within two or more of the different classes of judgment mentioned in sections 942 to 945, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure. But this fact does not make the judgment an exception to the rule requiring a stay bond in addition to the three hundred dollar undertaking on appeal to effectuate a supersedeas. For example, a stay bond is required to create a supersedeas pending appeal from a judgment directing a sale of real property under a mortgage,¹⁵ and also pending an appeal from a judgment directing a sale of personal property upon foreclosure of a mortgage thereon.¹⁶ To hold that a judgment directing a sale of real and personal property as an entirety and in one parcel is an exception to the rule requiring a stay bond, and is stayed by a three hundred dollar undertaking on appeal, would be in effect to interpolate a proviso or exception in sections 943 and 945 not warranted either by the language of the code provisions or by any consideration of justice.¹⁷ On the contrary, the appellant in such case is required to give several or all of the undertakings provided for, according to the character of the judgment and the extent of the appeal. This is recognized by the proviso in section 947 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "The undertakings prescribed by sections nine hundred and forty-one, nine hundred and forty-two, nine hundred and forty-three, and nine hundred and forty-five, may be in one instrument or several, at the option of the appellant." If, then, there be a part or branch of the judgment as to which no undertaking is given, the proceedings upon such part or branch are not stayed.¹⁸

Judgment on foreclosure.—When a judgment on foreclosure is a dual judgment, one in law in personam for a sum of money and one in equity decreeing the enforcement of the lien, it has been held that inasmuch as the personal judgment might be enforced immediately by execution without regard to the sale, not only must stay bond be given providing against waste and deficiency, but a bond in double the amount of the judgment must also be given.¹⁹ When the judgment is in the form now in common use, that is to say, where the judgment, after reciting the amount due, immediately proceeds to order the property sold, the proceeds applied thereon, and directs the entry of a judgment for a deficiency, if any, there is no judgment which is enforceable by common execution, and a bond in double the amount of the judgment is not required.²⁰

§ 192. In Cases not Otherwise Provided for.—Section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"In cases not provided for in sections nine hundred and forty-two, nine hundred and forty-three, nine hundred and forty-four, and nine hundred and forty-five, the perfecting of an appeal by giving the undertaking or making the deposit mentioned in section nine hundred and forty-one, stays proceedings in the court below upon

This provision establishes the general rule in this state that the perfecting of an appeal under the regular method by the giving of a three hundred dollar undertaking on appeal ipso facto operates as a supersedeas;² and this, without an order of court or stay bond.³ Unlike sections 942 to 945, inclusive, section 949 includes judgments in which the appellant is not required to do anything.⁴

§ 193. to create a supersedeas pending an appeal from an order requiring a personal representative to pay a family allowance,²⁰ or from a decree of distribution.¹

Eminent domain.—While an appeal by a plaintiff from a judgment of condemnation prior to the expiration of the thirty day period in which he is required to pay the sum assessed has the effect of staying execution on such judgment by the filing of a cost bond,² since the amendment to section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1903, an appeal by the defendant does not operate as a supersedeas nor preclude the court from making an order letting the plaintiff into possession after payment of the money into court.³

§ 194. Stay Where Appeal is Taken Under Alternative Method.—Section 941c of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to appeals taken by the alternative method, provides:

“Appeals perfected pursuant to the provisions of the foregoing section [section 941b providing for the method of taking such an appeal], shall have the same force and effect as appeals taken pursuant to the provisions of sections nine hundred and thirty-nine, nine hundred and forty and nine hundred and forty-one of this code.”

It has been contended that the “taking” of an appeal, under the old method, was accomplished by the filing and service of a notice of appeal, and that the “perfecting” of the appeal by the subsequent giving of an undertaking is the act which works a stay of proceedings, and that the language of 941c does not carry into appeals by the alternative method the effect of the undertaking which was given to "perfect" an appeal already "taken." But it has been held that this is an unduly narrow interpretation, and that it is not in harmony with the true purpose of the enactments relating to the new method. Under section 940 an appeal is not effectual without the undertaking. Section 941 deals with the subject of security alone. When, therefore, section 941c speaks of appeals taken pursuant to sections 939, 940 and 941, it refers to appeals supported by the necessary undertaking, and imports the force and effect of such appeals into appeals taken by the new method. It follows that the filing of a notice of appeal under the alternative method, in cases where a stay bond is not required by sections 942 to 945, is operative to stay proceedings in the court below, to the same extent as the filing and service of notice followed by the giving of the three hundred dollar undertaking, under the old method.⁴ Of course, the mere filing of a notice of appeal does not operate as a stay where the judgment or order is one designated in sections 942 to 945, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁵

What Judgments or Orders may be Stayed.

§ 195. In General.—The code specifically enumerates and authorizes a stay of proceedings on the following judgments or orders: Directing the payment of money;⁶ directing the assignment or delivery of documents or personal property;⁷ appointing a receiver; directing a sale of personal property upon the foreclosure of a mortgage thereon; directing the execution of a conveyance or other instrument;⁸ and directing the sale or delivery of possession of real property.⁹ With certain specified exceptions,¹⁰ and subject to the limitations hereinafter noted,¹¹ it authorizes a stay of proceedings upon judgments or orders in cases not otherwise provided for.¹²

The stay of proceedings upon a judgment or order consequent upon an appeal therefrom is limited to the "proceedings" on the judgment for its enforcement, and from its very nature it can operate only upon judgments or orders commanding or permitting some act to be done.¹³

Self-executory judgments.—Where a judgment is self-executing, or has intrinsic effect, there are no proceedings to be stayed, or to be affected by an appeal therefrom.¹⁴ Instances of such judgments are those granting or dissolving an injunction;¹⁵ or determining the status of an individual, as in the case of granting or denying a divorce or annulling a marriage; or quieting title to a tract of land; or setting aside the execution of a deed,¹⁶ or effecting a revocation of the probate of a will.¹⁷ A judgment declaring a person to be elected a director of a corporation and confirming his election is another example of such a judgment. The judgment requires no execution further than its own terms, and consequently on appeal therefrom the appellate court cannot restrain the respondent from doing any act as director, or interfere with his participation in the management of the corporation as director.¹⁸ Adding to the enumeration of such judgments, it may be noted that an order disbarring an attorney needs no process to execute it, and is unaffected by an appeal or writ of error.¹⁹ Of course, if a judgment has been executed, it cannot be stayed, as there is nothing upon which the stay can operate.²⁰

§ 196. Injunctions.—By a line of decisions beginning with the early history of the state, the rule has been settled that an appeal does not stay the force of a prohibitive injunction. Such an injunction requires no execution for its enforcement. It acts directly without process upon the defendant, or, in other words, it is self-executing, and pending an appeal from an order granting such injunction the lower court has full power to punish its violation.¹ Such a rule, in contemplation of law, does not injure the defendant, as he is secured by the undertaking, while if an appeal with an undertaking of three hundred dollars would have the effect of staying the injunction itself, the plaintiff would have no remedy.²

tion, is suspended and rendered inoperative by an appeal.³ A proceeding by the court issuing it to punish a violation as a contempt is in the nature of process for the enforcement of the affirmative feature of the writ, which may be likened to an execution.⁴ The object of the rule in both cases is to preserve the status quo pending an appeal.⁵

Injunctions which are incidental.—It has been contended that there is a third class of injunctions which, although prohibitive, are “incidental” to the principal relief and are taken out of the settled rule governing prohibitive injunctions and given the characteristics of a mandatory injunction; but it has been specifically held that there is no support for such distinction either in principle or on authority.⁶

Order dissolving injunction.—The filing of a bond upon an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction cannot have the effect of reviving the injunction.⁷ When a process is once discharged and dead, it cannot be revived but by a new exercise of judicial power.⁸

§ 197. Mandatory and Prohibitory Injunctions Distinguished.—An injunction is purely prohibitory within the rule stated in the preceding section, which merely has the effect of preserving the subject of the litigation in statu quo;⁹ while, in general, an injunction is mandatory which compels affirmative action by the defendant,¹⁰ or where, even though restrictive in form, it necessarily contemplates a change in the relative positions or rights of the parties from those existing at the time the injunction is granted or the decree is entered.¹¹ Conversely, when an injunction is in its nature prohibitory, it is not transformed and made mandatory within the rule, because it incidentally involves the doing of some affirmative act. The courts will not indulge in any excessive refinements in selecting some minor mandatory feature of the injunction, nor will they hold that any such minor feature should control the nature of the relief granted.¹²

§ 198. Decree Adjudging Usurpation of Public Office. Section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the mere perfecting of an appeal from a judgment does not operate as a supersedeas "where it adjudges the defendant guilty of usurping, or intruding into, or unlawfully holding a public office, civil or military, within this state."¹³ This language is identical with that in section 803 of the code, authorizing the commencement of an action in quo warranto or for usurpation; and it is apparent that it is to the judgment in actions of this character that section 949 has reference. It does not therefore apply to a judgment in an election contest, though the court adds to the judgment an unauthorized declaration that the contestee unlawfully holds the office.¹⁴ Nor does it apply to a judgment removing an officer because of malfeasance in office. It follows that in such cases as these last mentioned, the perfecting of an appeal ipso facto operates as a supersedeas.¹⁵

§ 199. Orders for Sale of Perishable Property—Motion for Change of Venue.—Section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure excepts from its operation judgments or orders directing the sale of perishable property.¹⁶ In such case "the court below may order the property to be sold, and the proceeds thereof to be deposited, to abide the judgment of the appellate court."¹⁷ This provision has reference to a case where the order appealed from directing the sale of the property has been made because and upon the ground that the property sold is perishable, and it contemplates an adjudication or a finding to that effect on the part of the court making such order.¹⁸ It is true that in ordinary cases there can be no stay of proceedings upon such an order, and perhaps the determination of the question whether the property ordered sold in any case is perishable is so far within the jurisdiction of the trial court that prohibition will not lie.¹⁹ But in a case where the trial court has ordered the sale of property as perishable, where, clearly, and as a matter of law, it is not of that nature, the appellate court, by virtue of its inherent powers, may grant a supersedeas.²⁰

Order on motion for change of venue.—It is expressly provided that an appeal from an order granting or denying a change of venue does not stay the trial in the court below.¹ Hence, a trial court, notwithstanding an appeal from an order refusing to change the place of trial, may proceed with the trial of the cause;² and the appellant by appearing and contesting the plaintiff's right to recover does not waive his right to rely on his motion.³

Who Need not Give Stay Bonds.

§ 200. In General.—Certain persons are excepted by statute from the provisions requiring stay bonds.⁴ The code provides as follows:

“When an executor, administrator or guardian, who has given an official bond, appeals from a judgment or order of the superior court made in proceedings had upon the estate of which he is executor, administrator, or guardian, his official bond shall stand in the place of an undertaking on appeal.”⁵

And formerly, it was provided that when an assignee had given an official undertaking and appealed from a judgment or order in insolvency, “his official undertaking stands in place of an undertaking on appeal.”⁶

Statutes of this character apply only to appeals from judgments and orders made in the specified proceedings.⁷ The official bond of the officer is security for the proper distribution of all money or property found to be in his hands by the final judgment settling his accounts. And so, on an appeal from a judgment or order in such proceedings, his official bond has the effect of staying proceedings thereon as effectually as if a new undertaking were given for that purpose. And it has been held that this is true though the judgment or order direct the payment of money.⁸

§ 201. Persons Acting in Another's Right.—Section 946 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as it is here pertinent, provides that “the court below may in its discretion dispense with or limit the security required by this chapter [relating to appeals in general], when the appellant is an executor, administrator, trustee or other person acting in another's right."⁹ Whether this provision includes private trustees or not, its obvious purpose is to excuse a stay bond when the court below in its discretion shall so order, where the appellant is a trustee acting under and by virtue of some official authority, whether by appointment of the court or by appointment as an officer of the state. Accordingly, it has been held that a state superintendent of banks, when acting as an officer liquidating the assets of a bank and distributing the same to its creditors, is clearly a trustee. Not only is he a trustee, but he is also a person acting in another's right. The word "trustee" is not limited within the meaning of this section to trustees appointed by and acting under the supervision of some court.¹⁰

§ 202. Where Judgment Directs Payment of Money.—Section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"If the appeal be from a judgment or order directing the payment of money, it does not stay the execution of the judgment or order unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the appellant, by two or more sureties, to the effect that they are bound in double the amount named in the judgment or order;¹¹ that if the judgment or order appealed from, or any part thereof be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, the appellant will pay the amount directed to be paid by the judgment or order, or the part of such amount as to which the judgment or order is affirmed, if affirmed only in part, and all damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal, and that if the appellant does not make such payment within thirty days after the filing of the remittitur from the supreme court in the court from which the appeal is taken, judgment may be entered on motion of the respondent in his favor against the sureties for such amount, together with the interest that may be due thereon, and the damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal. If the judgment or order appealed from be for a greater amount than two thousand dollars, and the sureties do not state in their affidavits of justification accompanying the undertaking that they are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking, the stipulation may be that the judgment to be entered against the sureties shall be for such amounts only as in their affidavits they may state that they are severally worth, and judgment may be entered against the sureties by the court from which the appeal is taken, pursuant to the stipulations herein designated.¹² When the judgment or order appealed from is made payable in a specified kind of money or currency, the judgment entered against the sureties upon the undertaking must be made payable in the same kind of money or currency."¹³

This is the only section of the code which requires a condition of the undertaking to the effect that judgment against the sureties may be taken on motion.¹⁴

It has been held, construing an undertaking on appeal under the act upon which section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure is based,¹⁵ that an undertaking which shows that the principal is about to take an appeal and recites that, whereas, he is desirous of a stay of execution, the stipulators undertake, etc., shows a sufficient consideration for its execution.¹⁶

Cotton*, 174 Cal. 256, 162 Pac. 1019 (holding that the motion for judgment against the surety under this section involves only the decision of the question of law, whether or not, upon the record and files in the case, the respondent is entitled to the judgment against the surety, and holding further that the surety is not entitled to a new trial of this proceeding).

§ 203. When Judgment Directs Sale or Delivery of Real Property.—It is in the Code of Civil Procedure provided that

“If the judgment or order appealed from, direct the sale or delivery of possession of real property, the execution of the same cannot be stayed, unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the appellant, with two or more sureties, to the effect that during the possession of such property by the appellant, he will not commit, or suffer to be committed any waste thereon, and that if the judgment be affirmed, or the appeal dismissed, he will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property from the time of the appeal until the delivery of possession thereof, pursuant to the judgment or order, not exceeding a sum to be fixed by the judge of the court by which the judgment was rendered or order made, and which must be specified in the undertaking. When the judgment is for the sale of mortgaged premises, and the payment of a deficiency arising upon the sale, the undertaking must also provide for the payment of such deficiency.”¹⁷

The Practice Act contained a provision of substantially the same effect.¹⁸

This section is double, and provides for two distinct undertakings upon two distinct kinds of judgments, one directing a sale of real property, and the other directing the delivery of possession of real property. Where the judgment directs a sale, the undertaking need only provide security against waste,¹⁹ unless such sale is of mortgaged premises and the judgment provides for the payment of a deficiency, in which case it must provide for the payment of such deficiency.²⁰ In such case, no provision need be inserted for the payment of the value of the use and occupation of the premises pending the appeal for the obvious reason that the judgment creditor does not become entitled to the value of such use and occupation until after a sale has been made.¹ When the judgment directs a delivery of possession of real property, the undertaking must provide against waste and for the payment of the value of the use and occupation, and for these two only, for there can be, in such case, no question as to deficiency.² Where the sale is directed for the purpose of satisfying any lien other than a mortgage lien, the undertaking need not provide for the payment of any deficiency which the judgment may direct. To this extent, the statute discriminates in favor of mortgages and against other liens.³

Who must give undertaking for deficiency.—While at one time the supreme court inclined to the opinion that a deficiency bond was required only of persons in possession of the property ordered sold,⁴ in mortgage foreclosure suits it has been specifically held that this section is applicable to every appellant, whether or not he is the mortgagor, or is in possession, or whether or not a deficiency judgment is rendered against him. The character of undertaking by one not in possession was not discussed in Bank).

is based on the language of the statute which provides that a judgment of foreclosure shall not be stayed unless there be an undertaking "on . . . the part of the appellant . . . to the effect that he will not commit waste."⁶

§ 204. Where Judgment Directs Delivery of Documents or Personalty or Execution of Instruments.—It is provided by the code that

"If the judgment or order appealed from direct the assignment or delivery of documents or personal property, the execution of the judgment or order cannot be stayed by appeal, unless the things required to be assigned or delivered be placed in the custody of such officer or receiver as the court may appoint, or unless an undertaking be entered into on the part of the appellant, with at least two sureties, and in such amount as the court, or a judge thereof, may direct, to the effect that the appellant will obey the order of the appellate court upon the appeal."⁶

The delivery of the documents or property disposed of by the order appealed from to an officer appointed by the court stays the enforcement of the order, the same as where a stay bond is given. Pending such stay, the trial court is not authorized to grant a motion directing such officer to deliver the property to one of the parties.⁷

7. Oswald v. Sloane, 39 Cal. App. 192, 178 Pac. 312.

In respect to a judgment directing the execution of a conveyance or other instrument, the code provides:

“If the judgment or order appealed from direct the execution of a conveyance or other instrument, the execution of the judgment or order cannot be stayed by the appeal until the instrument is executed and deposited with the clerk with whom the judgment or order is entered, to abide the judgment of the appellate court.”⁸

On reversal of the judgment any deed deposited with the clerk under this section of the code becomes a nullity.⁹

§ 205. Amount—In General.—When an appeal is taken from a judgment or order directing the payment of money, the stay undertaking must bind the sureties in double the amount named in the judgment or order.¹⁰ It is not necessary that the undertaking cover the amount awarded as costs, as the words “in double the amount named in the judgment” must be taken as referring to the amount adjudged to be due the prevailing party upon the claim involved in the action and for which recovery is awarded, and as not including the incidental recovery on account of the costs of the action awarded only upon claim made and ascertainment of amount had subsequent to the giving of the judgment.¹¹ When the order ap-

If the legislature had so intended in case of appeals from

pealed from is in relation to alimony and requires the payment of a specific sum monthly, an undertaking in double the amount the appellant is required to pay in one month is not sufficient.¹² But an undertaking in an amount double the amount of the monthly payments for the period of three years, assumed to be the period during which the appeal will probably be pending, is in accordance with a correct construction of the statute.¹³

§ 206. Amount Fixed by Court.—An undertaking to stay execution given pursuant to section 943 of the Code of Civil Procedure is required to be in such amount as is fixed by the trial court,^{13a} and this is also the rule under section 945 of the code.¹⁴ It is the official duty of the judge to fix the amount of the undertaking to be given pursuant to these sections, and by refusing to do so, he thereby deprives an appellant of a substantial right which the statute has conferred. He should not refuse to fix the amount of the undertaking on the ground that after the entry of the decree appealed from, some matter has supervened which would deprive the appellant of an effective stay, even though he should give an undertaking. The sufficiency of such matters should be determined when presented upon a direct issue in which the right to the stay of proceedings is involved.¹⁵ In lieu, however, of having the amount of the undertaking fixed superior courts, it would have been an easy matter so to specify in this case also).

by the court, the parties may be permitted to stipulate as to what that amount shall be.¹⁶

An order fixing the amount of a stay bond may be made ex parte, though it is undoubtedly the safer and better practice to give the respondent an opportunity to be heard.¹⁷ Under section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial judge is authorized to fix the amount of the stay bond on appeal from a judgment foreclosing a mortgage on real property, as to all three matters mentioned in the statute, namely, waste, use and occupation, and deficiency;¹⁸ but it is not necessary that the order segregate the amounts.¹⁹

Modification and review.—When an order fixing the amount of a stay bond has been made and complied with, the appeal is perfected and further proceedings in the court below are stayed. That court has no power thereafter to vacate or modify its order so as to require a bond in a larger amount.²⁰ Nor can the appellate court review the conclusion of the trial court in this particular or require additional security as a condition to the maintenance of the stay.¹

or order appealed from, the appellate court cannot do so.² In such case the appellant's remedy is not by application for a writ of supersedeas,³ but for a writ of mandate to compel the trial judge to act.⁴

§ 207. Sureties and Affidavit of Justification.—The code requires that all undertakings to stay execution of judgments be entered into on the part of the appellant “by two or more sureties,”⁵ except when a surety company, which has complied with all the statutory requirements, is surety, in which case such company “may become and shall be accepted as security, or as sole and sufficient surety upon such undertaking.”⁶ It has been contended that the quoted words were imperative, and that such a corporation must be accepted as sole and sufficient security regardless of the disparity between the amount of the undertaking and the amount of its assets. To give the statute such an interpretation would defeat its general policy, which is undoubtedly to provide ample security for money judgments in order to stay proceedings for their enforcement pending appeals, and it has been specifically held that such contention is not maintainable. Like a natural person, a surety company when justifying must show surplus assets at least equal to the amount of its undertaking.⁷

Affidavit of justification.—Under section 1057 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the undertaking is required to be accompanied with an affidavit of the sureties (except when the surety is a surety company) that they are each residents and householders or freeholders within the state, and are each worth the sum specified in the undertaking over and above all their just debts and liabilities, exclusive of property exempt from execution. Such affidavit must accompany the undertaking, as the law demands it. And as the statement that the sureties are either householders or freeholders is probably the most material fact demanded by the affidavit, an undertaking without the statement is insufficient as a stay bond. This rule is distinct from that relating to the justification of the sureties. The justification is a thing apart from the bond, while the qualification of the sureties is a material part of the bond.⁸ Such an affidavit is not required of a surety company because it cannot in many cases be a resident of the state, or a householder or freeholder in the ordinary sense of the term. Moreover, the insurance commissioner's certificate ordinarily supplies the equivalent of the affidavit in this respect.⁹

§ 208. Approval, Filing and Delivery.—An undertaking to stay proceedings on a judgment must be approved by a proper officer, and it has been held that the trial court has power, in a proper case, to set aside the approval, notwithstanding the filing of the transcript in the appellate court.¹⁰

10. Palmer v. Galvin, 2 Cal. Unrep. 446, 6 Pac. 99.

Delivery and filing.—No delivery of the undertaking is necessary; or, at least, the execution of the paper, the delivery of it to the clerk, filing it among the papers with the affidavit of justification and the suspension of proceedings are prima facie a sufficient proof of delivery, if a delivery is essential.^{10a} While the three hundred dollar bond on appeal is required to be filed within a limited time after service of notice of appeal,¹¹ there is nothing in the code which limits the time in which to file a stay bond. Such a bond may be given after the taking of the appeal, and at any time before the execution is satisfied by a sale under it.¹² But an undertaking filed after an execution sale is too late, though filed on the same day.¹³

§ 209. Justification of Sureties.—In respect to the justification of sureties on undertakings on appeal, the code provides as follows:

“The adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties to any of the undertakings mentioned in sections nine hundred and forty-one, nine hundred and forty-two, nine hundred and forty-three, and nine hundred and forty-five, at any time within thirty days after notice of the filing of such undertaking; and unless they or other sureties, within twenty days after the appellant has been served with notice of such exception, justify before a judge of the court below, upon five days’ notice to the respondent of the time and place of justification, execution of the judgment, order, or decree appealed from is no longer stayed.”¹⁴

A surety company may be required to justify under this section with exactly the same effect as if the undertaking had been executed by natural persons.¹⁵

The appellant has the full period of twenty days in which the sureties on the original bond or on a new bond may justify, and if the sureties fail to appear for justification in pursuance of one notice, and if there is sufficient time left to produce the same or other sureties upon five days' notice, the appellant may give a new notice of justification and, at the time noticed, may tender a new bond.¹⁶

Notice of justification.—The code requires five days' notice of justification. This time is not extended by the fact that notice is given by mail, as section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application. A notice of justification requires the exceptant to appear at the time specified in the notice, and section 1013 applies only where some act is required to be done or some right exercised within a certain number of days after service, and not to the right to be present at a proceeding at the time specified in the notice. The fact that the notice is to the effect that the sureties on the original bond will justify, does not prevent the appellant from filing a new bond with different sureties.¹⁷ justify his sureties. When that twenty days have elapsed without justification, then the proceeding is at an end and the right to a stay is lost, so far as the trial court is concerned). See Holt v. James, 10 Cal. App. 360, 101 Pac. 1065, where the trial court made an order requiring the sureties to justify before the expiration of the twenty days, or that execution be issued. Such an order is probably without the jurisdiction of the trial court, but this point was not decided.

Review of decision as to sufficiency.—The statute has provided no mode by which the decision of the officer in favor of the sufficiency of the sureties may be reviewed. And so, where, prior to the amendment of 1905, the statute designated the clerk as one of the officers before whom justification could be had, it was held that his decision on the question could not be reviewed by the appellate court upon an application for a writ of supersedeas;¹⁸ and it was also held that after a justification, under the code, the court has no power to order a second and summary justification.¹⁹

§ 210. Construction of Undertaking.—While the sureties are entitled to stand upon the express terms of their agreement,²⁰ it is nevertheless true that the language of their agreement is to receive a fair and reasonable interpretation for the purpose of effectuating its objects.¹ In this connection the courts say:

“We are bound to assume that the sureties intended the instrument to be effectual, not nugatory, and if what was intended as the condition may be ascertained from the terms, read in connection with the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, . . . the bond was executed, it must be sustained. . . . To thus ascertain what the parties intended by the instrument executed is strictly consistent with the rule that a surety is not to be held beyond the contract he has entered into. What contract he has made is to be determined by the same rules of interpretation as are applied to other contracts, the purpose being to ascertain what he has bound himself to do. When that is ascertained his obligation is strictly limited to it.”²

§ 211. Effect of Insufficiency of Undertaking or Sureties.—When an undertaking filed for the purpose of staying execution fails in substantial respects to comply with the form required by statute, it is wholly ineffectual to stay execution. In such case the respondent has the right to sue out execution at once,³ even though he may have instituted proceedings for the justification of sureties.⁴ And if the sheriff refuses to enforce the writ on the ground that an appeal has been taken, the court may make an order requiring him to proceed.⁵ A mere clerical error in the bond, however, does not defeat a stay.⁶

Effect of insufficiency of sureties.—When an appeal is perfected and the proper undertaking executed, the proceedings are stayed in the first instance without regard to the sufficiency of the sureties. It is only necessary that a bond be given at the proper time and that it be in due form.⁷ If the sureties are insufficient pecuniarily, the opposite party has his remedy under the code by excepting to them.⁸

error and should be read "two thousand dollars").

Mulcrevy, 166 Cal. 325, 136 Pac. 60 (though the sureties are in fact insufficient, the undertaking operates until the sureties, after exception, have failed to justify, as a stay); Wheeler v. McMann, 99 Cal. 497, 34 Pac. 80 (notwithstanding the insufficiency of the sureties, the stay bond is equally effective in staying further proceedings and in releasing from levy property levied on under execution); Lee Chuck v. 8. Code Civ. Proc., § 948. See supra, § 209.

The stay continues until the expiration of the time allowed for justification,⁹ and since the code provides that unless they or other sureties justify as therein provided, the execution is "no longer stayed," it follows that if they or other sureties justify, the stay continues, and that the liability of the old or the new sureties, as the case may be, relates back to the time of the first stay.¹⁰ Of course, the execution is no longer stayed if the sureties fail to justify.¹¹ The respondent's remedy, then, is not by motion to dismiss the appeal, but by motion in the court below for leave to proceed on the judgment notwithstanding the undertaking.¹² The appellant, on the other hand, may, in such case, file an undertaking to stay execution, at any time before the judgment has been enforced.¹³

New or Additional Undertaking.

§ 212. Where Sureties Fail to Justify or Undertaking is Void.—When an appellant has filed a stay bond sufficient in form, and neither the sureties thereon or other sureties justify within the time limited therefor, on exception taken, the appellant cannot take further proceedings in the court below to effect a stay. Inasmuch as a bond sufficient in form operates as a stay, though the sureties be insufficient, a contrary rule would make it possible for an appellant, by a series of successive bonds executed by insufficient sureties, to obtain all the ben-

Distinguishable from the case just stated, is that in which the undertaking to stay execution first filed is nugatory and void. Such an undertaking is wholly ineffectual to stay execution, and does not preclude the respondent from enforcing his judgment at once;¹⁵ and since a stay bond may be filed at any time before execution of the judgment,¹⁶ the appellant, without any authorization of the appellate court, may file a second bond sufficient in form at any time before the judgment has been enforced.¹⁷

§ 213. Where Sureties Become Insufficient or Bond is Lost.—In respect to the subject of this section the code provides as follows:

“When it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court or a judge thereof, from which the appeal was taken, that a surety or sureties upon an appeal bond from any cause has or have become insufficient, and the bond or undertaking inadequate as security for the payment of the judgment appealed from, or that the bond has been lost or destroyed, the last-named court, or a judge thereof, may order the giving of a new bond with sufficient sureties, as a condition to the maintenance of the appeal. The said bond or undertaking shall be approved by the last-named court, or a judge thereof; and in case said sureties fail to justify before said last-named court, or a judge thereof, or fail to comply with the order to appear and justify, execution may issue upon the judgment as if no undertaking to stay execution had been given.”¹⁸

This statute contemplates that a perfect bond has been prepared and filed in the first instance, and that the imperfections thereto subsequently arose; it contemplates appeals from money judgments, and while it gives the court or judge authority only to order a new bond, it in no way provides for a further or second justification upon the original bond.^{18a} Though the section authorizes the court to order a new bond with sufficient sureties "as a condition to the maintenance of the appeal," it is obvious when the nature and purpose of supersedeas bonds are considered that a noncompliance with the order does not necessitate a dismissal of the appeal. The only consequence of a failure to keep the stay bond good is that execution may issue.¹⁹

III. UPON ALLOWANCE BY COURT OR JUDGE.

§ 214. On Order of Trial Court—Control of Right Generally.—Whether a stay shall be ordered in a particular case is a matter as to which the trial court exercises large discretionary powers;²⁰ and its determination will not be disturbed by the appellate court, unless an abuse of discretion is made to appear.¹ If the trial court should direct a stay on condition that an undertaking be executed within a specified time, the stay falls if the undertaking is not given in that time.² But when the direction is given and a sufficient undertaking is executed pursuant thereto, the proceedings are stayed precisely as in other cases. The court has no further control over the matter and cannot, without statutory authority, withdraw its direction or discharge such order.³ However, it may set aside its order if the sureties on the undertaking required by the court fail to justify when excepted to.⁴

In actions of forcible entry, etc.—With reference to a stay of proceedings in actions of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, the code provides that an appeal taken by the defendant shall not stay proceedings upon the judgment unless the judge or justice before whom the same was rendered so directs.⁵ The power to grant a stay under the provisions of this section rests exclusively in the court that tried the case. And when an application for a stay has been denied by the trial judge, the appellate court has no power to accept an undertaking and direct a stay of proceedings.⁶

§ 215. On Order or Writ of Appellate Court—In General.—The power to issue a writ of supersedeas is one of the powers incidental to a court of last resort.⁷ If, after the creation of a statutory supersedeas, by the execution of the undertaking required by the code, the court below seeks to enforce its judgment, the court to which an appeal is taken will grant a special order or writ of supersedeas restraining action by the trial court. It is in cases of this character that writs of supersedeas are issued most frequently.⁸

Nature and scope of remedy.—The remedy is generally regarded as injunctive or prohibitive in character to prevent the taking of some step toward the enforcement of the judgment which has been threatened.⁹ But it is corrective in nature also; and the court has even gone so far, upon the granting of a writ of supersedeas, as to quash writs already issued out of the superior court, to vacate sales already made in pursuance of the order of that court,¹⁰ and to direct a return of the money obtained with interest.¹¹ This power exists also when the statute makes no provision for a stay in a particular case and the writ is necessary to preserve the rights of the parties,¹² and where the sureties fail to justify in the trial court.¹³

§ 216. In Cases not Provided for by Statute.—The power of an appellate court to issue a writ of supersedeas exists in cases where the statute regulating a stay of proceedings on appeal makes no provision for such stay in the particular case, but where the writ is necessary to preserve the status quo, so that rights involved in an appeal when determined by the appellate court may not be lost or prejudiced by reason of the intervening execution of the judgment or order appealed from. Hence, it is a general rule, that when the law makes no provision for a stay, the appellate court should grant a supersedeas whenever it is reasonably necessary to protect the appellant from serious injury in case of a reversal.¹⁴ Thus, while it is true in ordinary cases that there can be no stay of proceedings on an order directing a sale of perishable property,¹⁵ if it appears that the court below has ordered a sale of property as perishable which clearly and as a matter of law is not of that nature, or if, as a matter of fact, it is extremely doubtful if it is perishable within the meaning of the code provision, the appellate court, by virtue of its inherent powers, has undoubted power to order a stay of proceedings pending an appeal, upon such terms and such security as it may deem proper.¹⁶ So, also, where, in an action to contest the rights of conflicting claims to money in the possession of a neutral depositary, a judgment is given for one claimant against the depositary, and it appears that such claimant has no means and that if he collects the money

the other will not be able to recover it if he should prevail on his appeal from the judgment, the court will grant a supersedeas to preserve the status quo, on the execution of a bond to secure the respondent the fruits of his judgment in case the judgment should be affirmed or the appeal dismissed.¹⁷

§ 217. In Injunction Cases.—The statutory law gives no stay of proceedings upon a prohibitory injunction.¹⁸ In consequence, it is an open question in this state whether the appellate courts have power to stay the force of an injunction on the ground that it is necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Assuming jurisdiction to exist, that court will not, in a proceeding for such a stay, review the correctness of the lower court's determination that an injunction was essential or proper. The appellate court must, however, consider the rights of the respondent as well as of the appellant, and contemplate the possibility of an affirmance as well as a reversal. If, therefore, a stay can be granted only at the risk of destroying rights which will belong to the respondent if the judgment is affirmed, it cannot be said to be necessary or proper to the complete exercise of appellate jurisdiction.¹⁹ On an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction, it has been held that an appellate court has no power to issue an order staying proceedings in an action on the injunction bond.²⁰

A writ of supersedeas is directed to the court whose action is sought to be restrained, or to some one of its officers; and it is limited to restraining any action upon the judgment appealed from. It cannot be directed to the parties to the action and used to perform the functions of an injunction against them, restraining them from any act in the assertion of their rights, other than to prevent them from using the process of the court below to enforce the judgment.⁵ And it cannot be em-

§ 220. Proceedings to Obtain Writ of Supersedeas.—

Under the California practice, in the rare cases where a writ of supersedeas is issuable, it must be obtained, where cause exists and upon proper terms by a motion or application,⁹ made by the appellant,¹⁰ to the court in which the appeal is pending.¹¹ The application is a proceeding in the original action, in aid of appellate jurisdiction. Hence, it should bear the title of the cause on appeal, the same as any other motion made in that cause,¹² and be entered on the register of actions in the court of review as a motion in the cause on appeal and under the same number.¹³ But any error in entitling the proceeding as an independent action will be corrected by the appellate court.¹⁴ The merits of an appeal will not be discussed on an application for a writ of supersedeas.¹⁵

Time of application.—An application for a writ of supersedeas can be made only while an appeal is pending, but it should not be made until steps to enforce the judgment or order appealed from have been initiated or threatened.¹⁶ No power in the appellate court to grant a supersedeas remains after the determination or dismissal of an appeal, and any steps looking to a stay of execution thereafter must be sought in the trial court.¹⁷ If the order complained of has been vacated before the hearing of an application for the writ, the petition will be dismissed.¹⁸

Security.—When the appellate court, by virtue of its inherent powers, grants a supersedeas in a case not covered by the statute, it may require the appellant to give an undertaking or bond to secure the respondent the fruits of his judgment in the event of an affirmance thereof, or a dismissal of the appeal.¹⁹ But when the supersedeas is granted in a case covered by statute, either in the case where the legislature has provided for a stay upon security in an amount fixed by a judge of the lower court, or upon the three hundred dollar undertaking, the appellate court is without authority to require additional security.²⁰

IV. SCOPE, EFFECT AND DURATION.

§ 221. In General.—As to the effect of a supersedeas, the code provides:

“Whenever an appeal is perfected, as provided in the preceding sections of this chapter, it stays all further proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from, or upon the matters embraced therein, and releases from levy property which has been levied upon under execution issued upon such judgment; provided, however, said property shall not be released from the levy, if the respondent excepts to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the giving of the undertaking staying execution until such sureties, or others, justify in the manner prescribed by law; but the court below may proceed upon any other matter embraced in the action and not affected by the order appealed from.”¹

This section relates to the perfection of an appeal by giving the undertaking mentioned in section 941 of the code in those cases in which such undertaking is sufficient to create a supersedeas, and also to the undertakings mentioned in sections 942, 943 and 945. In each case the giving of the required undertaking creates a statutory supersedeas.² Since the stay is limited by the terms of the statute to “proceedings in the court below” upon the judgment, it does not authorize an appellate court to restrain the respondent from enforcing his judgment in person and without the aid of the court.³

Prospective effect.—A stay of proceedings pending an appeal has no retrospective operation, and does not undo or render nugatory or unlawful any action that has already been had before the supersedeas became effective.⁴

On the contrary, it is prospective in its operation, and has the legitimate effect of keeping the proceedings in the condition they were when the stay of proceedings was granted. It operates to prevent any future change in the condition of the parties.⁵ It is not correct to say that a judgment or matters embraced in a judgment are stayed, and the statute does not say so. The statute declares that it is proceedings upon the judgment and the matters embraced therein that are stayed, that is, the execution—the enforcement—of the judgment is suspended.⁶ A statutory supersedeas then precludes the doing of any act for the purpose of carrying the judgment or order into effect.⁷ It suspends the power of the tody of a child pending an appeal therefrom (Ex parte Queirolo, 119 Cal. 635, 51 Pac. 956), if the parties have complied with the decree, a subsequent appeal with supersedeas is ineffectual as affecting the custody of the child and does not entitle the appellant to its return pending the appeal. The ordinary effect of an appeal from a judgment when proceedings therein are stayed is to preserve the rights of the parties to a controversy in the same condition as they were prior to the entry of judgment, and to prevent the appellant from being prejudiced by its enforcement; *People v. court below to issue an execution on the judgment or order appealed from,⁸ or, if a writ of execution is issued, prohibits the execution of the writ.⁹ It also prevents the trial court from enforcing the judgment or order by contempt proceedings,¹⁰ or through the appointment of a receiver,¹¹ or by other means.¹²

In ejectment.—In an ejectment suit, a stay bond given by the defendant on appeal from a judgment against him deprives the plaintiff of all right to any possession of the land until the determination of the appeal. It operates to give the defendant a lease of the land during that period in consideration of the obligations in his undertaking.¹³

Termination of stay.—The supersedeas terminates when the appellate court loses jurisdiction of the appeal, that is to say, when the remittitur is filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court.¹⁴

§ 222. As to Parties. While it seems that a supersedeas bond executed by one of several appellants is ordinarily effectual only as to the party giving the bond, the stay will extend to the whole of the judgment if an enforcement of any part will injuriously affect his rights. For example, where, in a claim and delivery suit, judgment is rendered against all of several defendants, and one appeals, the supersedeas thereon stays all proceedings on the judgment where the rights of the defendants are joint. In such case the right of the appellant extends to every article in controversy, and a levy upon any of them would disturb his possession at least in part.¹⁵

The stay given by section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure is effectual as to a judgment so far only as it affects the appellant and requires him to do something, or permits something to be done as to him. Accordingly, in an interpleader suit in which a judgment is rendered in favor of the individual defendant against the defendant in possession of the fund, an appeal by the plaintiff does not stay the enforcement of the judgment by the individual defendant against his codefendant.¹⁶

§ 223. Effect on Judgment, Lien, and Levy.—A statutory supersedeas does not destroy or impair the character of the judgment itself. It does not reverse, suspend or supersede the force of the judgment; that remains in all respects the same.¹⁷ Herein should be ob-

Any stay consequent upon a writ of error from the supreme court of the United States falls with the dismissal of the writ and the filing of the mandate thereon, without a specific order vacating the stay. Galvin v. Palmer, 134 Cal. 426, 66 Pac. 572.

served the distinction between the effect of an appeal from a judgment in staying further proceedings thereon, and its effect in depriving the judgment itself of any efficacy as evidence of the fact determined. The appeal suspends the force of the judgment as a conclusive determination of the rights of the parties, but the stay of proceedings consequent upon the appeal is limited to the enforcement of the judgment itself, and does not destroy or impair its character.¹⁸ A stay of execution does not operate to suspend the running of interest on the judgment or preclude a tender by the defendant for the purpose of stopping interest thereon.¹⁹

Effect on lien.—While a supersedeas, does not, in the absence of a statute, impair the lien of a judgment,²⁰ it is now provided by the code that the lien of a judgment continues for five years from the time the judgment is docketed, “unless the enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient under-

Co.*, 5 Utah, 151, 13 Pac. 174, to the effect that the taking of an appeal and the giving of a supersedeas bond do not make void, or nullify or suspend, the judgment or an injunction contained therein). See Estate of Piercy, 168 Cal. 750, 145 Pac. 88, holding that in an action against an administrator in his individual capacity, the giving of a stay bond does not extend the scope of the judgment appealed from as an adjudication against him in his representative capacity. 277 (decided prior to the enactment of Code Civ. Proc., § 671, in 1873-74). The time, however, during which the proceedings are stayed must be excluded from the computation of the time during which the judgment remains a lien; Barroilhet v. Hathaway, 31 Cal. 395, 89 Am. Dec. 193; Englund v. Lewis, 25 Cal. 337; Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 403 (holding that an undertaking insufficient in amount does not have this effect); Dewey v. Latson, 6 Cal. 130.

It has been held that any period of time which may transpire between the docketing of the judgment and the stay of proceedings is to be included in the computation of the time during which the judgment remains a lien. Barroilhet v. Hathaway, 31 Cal. 395, 89 Am. Dec. 193.

taking as provided in this code, in which case the lien of the judgment and any lien by virtue of an attachment that has been issued and levied in the action ceases."¹ Under our law, therefore, the lien of the judgment is destroyed by the filing of a proper stay bond.² And so it has been held that an owner of land may convey it pending appeal, provided he does not do so with an intent to defraud creditors.³

Effect on levy.—While ordinarily a supersedeas is not retroactive in nature, and in the absence of a contrary statute does not release a levy of execution,⁴ it is now specifically provided in this state that the effect of a supersedeas is to release "from levy property which has been levied upon under execution issued upon such judgment."⁵ Under this statute it is the duty of the sheriff to release all property from levy under writ of execution immediately upon notice to him of the perfection of the appeal, and the giving of the bond to stay execution, and this without regard to the sufficiency of the sureties.⁶

If the judgment has been executed, there is no further proceeding to be taken in the court below, and, consequently, there is nothing upon which the supersedeas can act.⁷

§ 224. Effect upon Attachment.—In respect to the effect of an appeal upon an attachment the code provides:

2. Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. Min. Co., 97 Cal. 353, 32 Pac. 446; Austin v. Union Paving & Contracting Co., 4 Cal. App. 610, 88 Pac. 731.

cided under the law prior to 1874). See generally, LEVY AND SEIZURE.

“An appeal does not continue in force an attachment, unless an undertaking be executed and filed on the part of the appellant by at least two sureties, in double the amount of the debt claimed by him, that the appellant will pay all costs and damages which the respondent may sustain by reason of the attachment, in case the order of the court below be sustained; and unless, within five days after the entry of the order appealed from, such appeal be perfected.”⁸

This statute refers to orders dissolving attachment and to judgments for the defendant in attachment suits. While section 553 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a judgment for the defendant dissolves an attachment, this section is to be construed in connection with section 946 just quoted. Thus construed, the dissolvent force of a judgment for the defendant is neutralized by a perfected appeal, provided the additional undertaking is filed and the appeal perfected within the specified time.⁹

While an appellant has sixty days in which to appeal, he must, if he wishes to preserve the lien of the attachment, perfect his appeal within five days of the entry of the order appealed from. It is optional with him as to whether or not steps be taken to preserve the lien.¹⁰

Bond to prevent levy.—A bond given to the sheriff pursuant to section 540 of the Code of Civil Procedure to prevent the levy of an attachment is not within the terms of section 671 providing for the cessation of the lien of the judgment if a supersedeas is had. And the bond is not destroyed or affected by the giving of a supersedeas bond to stay the enforcement of a judgment for the plaintiff.¹¹

§ 225. Effect on Proceedings not Embraced in Order or Judgment.—Under the provision of the code that “the court below may proceed upon any other matter embraced in the action and not affected by the order appealed from,”¹² an appeal can operate as a stay of proceedings only upon the specific judgment or order appealed from,¹³ that is to say, such proceedings as may be instituted by the respondent for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the judgment or order.¹⁴ It cannot affect other proceedings in the cause, or deprive the trial court of power to proceed upon any matter in an action not affected by the order appealed from.¹⁵

Conversely, a stay bond executed on appeal from a judgment does not affect any proceeding on a motion for new trial, as such motion is not in a direct line of the judgment, but is independent of it and collateral thereto.² Neither does a stay of proceedings upon a judgment preclude the trial court from discharging an ancillary receiver,³ or from making such orders as are necessary for preserving the property involved in the action, or enforcing a continuance of the status quo.⁴ It seems that the trial court may compel the sheriff to observe the stay of execution given by statute.⁵

§ 226. Effect upon Receiverships.—The filing of the undertaking on an appeal from an order appointing a receiver operates as a supersedeas, suspends all authority of the receiver under the order, withdraws from him the right to the control and possession of the property involved, and restores such right to the appealing party from whom it had been taken. But on such appeal, the supersedeas does not undo or reverse the order appointing the receiver. Neither does it render nugatory any action already taken by him under the order and before the appeal was taken and bond duly filed, or make such action unlawful. The rights and powers of the receiver being suspended, it is his duty, on being notified thereof by proper process, to restore that which had come into his hands to the parties from whom it had been taken and withheld.⁶ While an appeal in such case terminates the right of the lower court and its officers from acting further under the order appealed from, it does not, however, suspend the functions of a merely ancillary receivership, or deprive the trial court of authority over the receiver in respect to matters not involved on the appeal.⁷

Ancillary receivership.—Upon an appeal from a judgment the functions of an ancillary receiver are not necessarily suspended during the appeal;⁸ neither is the power of the court to remove or suspend him superseded by the appeal.⁹ But a supersedeas consequent upon an appeal necessarily deprives a trial court of power to appoint a receiver after judgment for the purpose of carrying the judgment into effect, as this is a proceeding upon the judgment.¹⁰ For example, pending an appeal from a judgment dissolving a corporation and directing that its affairs be wound up and its effects distributed under the control of the court, the trial court is without authority to appoint a receiver of the effects of the corporation during the pendency of the appeal.¹¹ So, also, where a receiver is appointed to sell mortgaged prem-

V. PROCEEDINGS ON VIOLATION.

§ 227. Supersedeas and Prohibition.—Upon the violation of a statutory supersedeas, actual or threatened, the appellant may apply to the appellate court in which the appeal is pending for a writ of supersedeas.¹³ This remedy is more effectual and comprehensive than that by writ of prohibition in all cases where the acts of the party restrained constitute proceedings which are stayed by an appeal. Moreover, prohibition may be denied where supersedeas affords a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.¹⁴ While it is true that the writ of prohibition has sometimes been granted, at the instance of a party to the appeal, the existence of the remedy by supersedeas does not appear to have been called to the attention of the court, and the effect of such remedy was not discussed.¹⁵ If, however, the applicant is not a party to the action, he cannot move for a supersedeas, and may therefore have a writ of prohibition.¹⁶

§ 228. Other Remedies.—Writ of review or certiorari will lie to annul proceedings of a trial court in violation of a supersedeas,¹⁷ such, for example, as an order adjudging one in contempt for refusing to obey the order appealed from.¹⁸ Contempt proceedings are proper on disobedience of an order of the appellate court staying execution, and the respondent cannot excuse himself from contempt by questioning the regularity of the steps resulting in the order.¹⁹ In the exercise of its authority to preserve the property, that court is empowered to punish as for contempt the violation of any provision of a prohibitory injunction, where the parties refuse to allow the property to remain as it was at the date of the decree.²⁰ Inasmuch as the action of a trial court in attempting to enforce its judgment or order by contempt proceedings in violation of a stay pending an appeal therefrom is without jurisdiction and void, the party may invoke the remedy of habeas corpus to secure his discharge from an unlawful imprisonment imposed.¹

I. RECORD ON APPEAL.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES THE RECORD.

Matters Included.

§ 229. In General.—The Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provisions as to what constitutes the record on appeal:

“On appeal from a final judgment, the appellant must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, of the judgment-roll, and of any bill of exceptions upon which the appellant relies.”²

“On appeal from a judgment rendered on an appeal, or from an order, except an order granting a new trial, the appellant must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, of the judgment or order appealed from, and of papers used on the hearing in the court below.”³

“On appeal from an order granting a new trial the appellant must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, of the order appealed from, the judgment-roll and any bill of exceptions prepared and settled as provided in section six hundred fifty of this code subsequently to the order granting the motion.”⁴

With reference to the corresponding sections of the Practice Act, Judge Sawyer said: “These several modes mentioned are all the methods provided for making a record on appeal in the ordinary proceedings authorized by the Practice Act. Each form is peculiarly adapted to the preparation, in a simple and direct mode, of an authentic record for the particular class of cases for which it is provided, which shall fairly present the exception taken and everything necessary to illustrate it. And we think these several modes convenient and certain, and fully adequate to all the exigencies of proceedings on appeal. Other modes, especially when wholly or in part ex parte, are liable to, and often do, result in an imperfect or partial record. The statute has provided a uniform mode of procedure for each class of proceedings, and the court is not authorized to recognize any other.'"⁵

§ 230. Notice of Appeal.—The Code of Civil Procedure makes the notice of appeal a part of the record, whether the appeal is from a final judgment,⁶ from a judgment rendered on appeal or from an order generally,⁷ or from an order granting a new trial.⁸ The purpose and preparation of a notice of appeal have already been discussed in this article,⁹ and the necessity for such a showing in the record will be noticed later.¹⁰ It will be sufficient in this place to observe that although the statute requires that a copy of the notice of appeal shall be served upon the adverse party, there is no provision in the statute, or in the rules of the supreme court, prescribing the mode in which such service shall be authenticated. The better practice is to have the proof of such service made a part of the record in the court from which the appeal is taken, in order that there may be evidence in that court that the judgment has been removed therefrom. If, however, the record, as certified, is silent upon the fact of such service, that fact itself will not authorize a dismissal of the appeal, for upon objection by the respondent, the appellant will be allowed to make proof thereof. For this purpose he may file in the appellate court either original proof of such service, or a certificate of the clerk below that such proof has been made and filed in that court.¹¹ No provision being made for the filing of the notice of appeal in the appellate court, it cannot constitute a part of the record on appeal unless it appears in the transcript.¹²

§ 231. Judgment-roll.—The code provides that the judgment-roll shall be a part of the record where the appeal is from a final judgment,¹³ and from an order granting a new trial.¹⁴ The judgment-roll is the record of the judgment, and the recitals in a judgment are the court's records of its own acts.¹⁵ Where there is no bill of exceptions, and no statement or substitute therefor, the appeal must be determined by what is disclosed in the judgment-roll alone.¹⁶ In such a case, the appellant is practically in the same position as one attacking a judgment collaterally; that is, he contends that the judgment-roll does not show jurisdiction.¹⁷ Reference should be made to later parts of this article for discussion as to what constitutes the judgment-roll,¹⁸ and as to what record other than the roll is required for an appeal.¹⁹

At common law, before the postea and entry of judgment, the roll was known as the issue roll, or nisi prius roll; after the entry of judgment it was called the judgment-roll. No judgment-roll was known in courts of Conversely, where there is no judgment-roll, the appellate court may only review the matters embraced in the bill of exceptions. Britt v. East Side Hdw. Co., 25 Cal. App. 231, 143 Pac. 244.

The main difference between collateral and direct attack upon a judgment is that upon collateral attack the record alone can be inspected and is conclusively presumed to be correct, while on direct attack the true facts may be shown in contradiction of the record. Kahn v. Matthai, 115 Cal. 689, 47 Pac. 698; Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 29 Pac. 220; Lick v. Stockdale, 18 Cal. 219.

In these cases "record" seems to be used as meaning "the judgment-roll." The contents of the judgment-roll, however, are not the same as the contents of the record on appeal. Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147, 52 Pac. 122. One might be said to be the "record of the judgment," the other is the "record on appeal," which, when the appeal is from the judgment, includes, of course, the record of that judgment. equity. Under the California practice, the judgment-roll is not and cannot be required to be made until final judgment has been made and entered.²⁰

§ 232. Bill of Exceptions.—Bills of exception were unknown at common law, but were introduced into English jurisprudence by a statute of 13 Edw. I.¹ Under the Practice Act in California, bills of exception were used only on appeals from judgments,² and could not be used on appeals from orders.³ Under the Code of Civil Procedure, however, bills of exception are equally applicable to any and all kinds of appeals,⁴ including appeals from final judgments,⁵ and appeals from orders granting a new trial.⁶ A bill of exceptions duly proposed and settled on a motion for a new trial may be used in support of an appeal from the judgment although it was not regularly used on the motion for a new trial,⁷ and although (under former practice) no appeal was taken from the order denying a new trial.⁸ A supplemental bill may be used, showing a waiver of failure to serve the principal bill of exceptions, on an appeal from a judgment, though it could not on an appeal from an order denying a new trial.⁹

The purpose of a bill of exceptions is to make a record of that which would otherwise not constitute a part of the record.¹⁰ Consequently, a bill of exceptions, or some substitute therefor, must be used whenever it is necessary to bring up on appeal matters which are not contained in the judgment-roll.¹¹

A later subdivision of this article treats of bills of exception in detail,¹² discussing, among other points, the matters to be included in a bill,¹³ the proceedings for settlement,¹⁴ the time for presentation and settlement,¹⁵ the availability of mandamus to compel settlement,¹⁶ and the right of settlement by the supreme court.¹⁷

§ 233. Papers Used on Hearing Below.—The code provides that “on appeal from a judgment rendered on an appeal, or from an order, except an order granting a new trial,” the record on appeal shall include “a copy . . . of papers used on the hearing in the court below.”¹⁸ These papers must be authenticated as having been used on the hearing below,¹⁹ for only the papers used below constitute the record on appeal, and not the papers on file.²⁰ If the record is prepared under the original method, the papers so used must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions.¹ If the record is prepared under the alternative method, they must be included in the reporter’s transcript.²

The following provision, added to the code in 1919, apparently has not been the subject of judicial construction to date, but is obviously of far-reaching importance:

“If it appear that there is any paper or record in the custody of the clerk of the trial court which was before the trial court but which is not included in the record on appeal, and an examination of such paper or record will assist in a determination of the appeal on its merits, the court in which the appeal is pending may, on motion of either party, or on its own motion, require the production of a certified copy of such paper or record, and the same shall thereupon be deemed a part of the record on appeal.'"³

§ 234. Alternative Method of Preparing Record.— Under the alternative method of preparing a record on appeal, available to "any person desiring to appeal from any judgment, order or decree of the superior court to the supreme court or any of the district courts of appeal,"⁴ the reporter's transcript becomes a part of the record as a substitute for the bill of exceptions.⁵ This alternative method of preparing the record on appeal is entirely independent of the alternative method of appeal itself,⁶ and whether the appeal has been taken by the old or the alternative method, the appellant may use the alternative method in preparing his record on appeal.⁷ The fact that the appellant at one time contemplated an appeal upon a bill of exceptions, and took steps to obtain an extension of time for the preparation thereof, cannot deprive him of the right of bringing up the appeal by a reporter's transcript.⁸ The use of the alternative method of appeal has found little favor with the courts,⁹ but is often used by counsel, due to the simplicity of the proceedings involved in the preparation of the transcript¹⁰ and the fact that it need not be printed.¹¹ Portions of the transcript which

§ 235. Opinion of Lower Court.—The rule is well established in California that the opinion of the lower court is not a part of the record on appeal,¹⁵ although the appellate court is always glad to find it in the transcript,¹⁶ because it is, as a rule, an aid in discovering the processes by which the judgment below was reached.¹⁷ Not being a part of the record, it cannot be considered on appeal.¹⁸ When it is incorporated in the transcript, it may be stricken out on motion.¹⁹ Since an opinion is not part of the record, it must be carefully distinguished from a finding,²⁰ and from a decision.¹

As the reason for the rule that the opinion of the lower court is not part of the record on appeal, it has been said that the opinion of the judge in making an order is not a part of the order itself, but merely his reason for making it.² No matter what reason the court below may assign for its action, the appellate court is not bound by such reason. Counsel may cite it in argument, as they may any other opinion given at nisi, and it may sometimes aid the appellate court in the solution of the question upon or to which it is cited; but it is not an act upon which error can be assigned. For this reason—possibly for others also—the legislature, in adopting the code, has omitted it from the list of papers required to be brought up on appeal.³

Letters and memoranda of trial judge.—Similarly letters from the trial judge to the attorney of one of the parties, written subsequent to the order in question, stating the ground of the ruling, are not part of the record on appeal.⁴ So, also, a memorandum from the trial judge to the clerk, stating the grounds of an order, is not a part of the record.⁵

§ 236. Statement on Motion for New Trial.—The Practice Act provided for statements on appeal and statements on motion for a new trial. The code originally did not provide for statements at all, but amendments were made in 1874 restoring statements on motion for new trial, and providing that they might be used on appeal from the judgment if used on the motion.⁶ An amendment of 1915, however, abolished such statements entirely.⁷

Under the Practice Act, a statement on motion for new trial could be used only in reviewing the order made thereon, in the absence of a stipulation allowing its use on an appeal from the judgment.⁸ Under the code, however, a statement settled in connection with a motion for a new trial might be used on an appeal from a judgment.⁹

It was originally held, under the code, that a statement on motion for a new trial could not be used on an appeal from the judgment unless it was actually used on a motion for a new trial.¹⁰ Later, however, it was held that the right to so use it does not depend upon the fact that it was actually used on a motion for a new trial,¹¹ or that an appeal was taken from the order denying the motion for a new trial;¹² but it was still required that there be a valid proceeding on a motion for a new trial and that the statement be properly prepared in connection with such proceeding.¹³

parties, or duly settled and certified by the court, became a part of the record, just as a bill of exceptions, demurrer to evidence, or any other mode by which questions of law or matters of evidence were made part of the record by the old system of practice.¹⁵ The office of a statement on appeal was to bring into the record the orders and proceedings, with the facts necessary to sustain them, which were not contained in the judgment-roll;¹⁶ or, in other words, to make that a record, which was before not a record.¹⁷

The Code of Civil Procedure, adopted in 1872, did not preserve the provisions of the Practice Act relating to statements on appeal,¹⁸ and such papers do not now exist or constitute a part of the record on appeal.¹⁹ In view of this fact, it has been deemed unnecessary to enter into a detailed discussion of statements on appeal in this work.

count, a brief account by the receiver, and a statement of offsets disallowed by the receiver do not constitute a record for appeal.¹⁹ There is no law authorizing an appellate court to notice a paper certified by the judge of the court below as containing "an abstract of the evidence given," and it must therefore be disregarded.²⁰

II. MATTERS REQUIRED IN RECORD.

§ 239. General Rules.—It is incumbent upon the appellant to show error by his record on appeal,¹ for an appellate tribunal cannot take judicial knowledge of proceedings in lower courts,² and every presumption is in favor of the correctness of the rulings and decisions of the court below.³ In other words, error must appear affirmatively from the record,⁴ for the presumption is indulged that the proceedings below were correct so far as this presumption is not overcome by the record.⁵ Thus it has been said that all intendments must be in favor of sustaining the judgments of courts of original jurisdiction; that to disturb such judgments, it is not sufficient that error may have intervened, but it must be affirmatively shown by the record.⁶ All intendments consistent with the record presented must be taken in support of the proceedings of the court below.⁷ If the record brought to the appellate court does not disclose the error relied upon, there is nothing for it to examine,⁸ and the order appealed from will be affirmed,⁹ or the appeal will be dismissed.¹⁰ Therefore, a party appealing from an order must bring up a record demonstrating conclusively that the lower court erred in its ruling, or he must fail in his appeal.¹¹ A respondent's objection because of the failure of the record to disclose error is not waived by failing to take an exception thereto in accordance with a rule of the supreme court requiring the respondent to take exception to certain technical objections to the record, for the question is not whether the appellants may be heard on the points of error assigned, but it is whether the record, as presented, discloses any error.¹²

§ 240. Jurisdiction of Court.—Upon direct appeal it is essential for the party seeking to sustain a judgment to show by the record itself that the court below had jurisdiction of the defendant. Recitals in the judgment will not be accepted as a substitute for the summons and proof of service;¹³ and there is no presumption in favor of the existence of any fact essential to the jurisdiction of the court over the defendant unless it is shown by the record.¹⁴ Applying this rule, it has been held that an order for the publication of summons will not be considered unless it is part of the record.¹⁵

Nevertheless, it is not always necessary that the judgment-roll show that the court acquired jurisdiction of the defendant if the court finds that he was duly served with process,¹⁶ for if the recital of jurisdiction finds support in other portions of the record, which, under any condition of facts, could exist, it will be presumed, in the absence of any contrary showing, that such condition of facts existed.¹⁷ Thus it has been held that where the judgment recites due service of summons, it will be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that there was a valid order for publication¹⁸ or a valid order authorizing the service of an amended complaint.¹⁹ Moreover, if the summons is absent from the judgment-roll, it may be shown by the other parts of the judgment-roll that it was in fact issued, and this will prima facie sustain the jurisdiction of the court.²⁰ If the record does not show the service of amended pleadings, it will be presumed, in the absence of affirmative showing to the contrary, that they were regularly served and that evidence thereof was before the court when it made its decree.¹

Jurisdiction of appellate court.—In considering questions relating to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, the distinction must be borne in mind as between jurisdiction over the subject matter and jurisdiction over the person. The law itself defines the scope and limitations of the former, whereas jurisdiction over the person is contingent upon process and service thereof in the particular case. It is manifest that what has been said in reference to the necessity for an affirmative showing in the record applies to jurisdiction over the person—not as to subject matter. It is clear also that notice of appeal and proof of service thereof as a prerequisite of the jurisdiction of the appellate court over the person of the defendant must appear by the record.² If the appellate court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action, it will dismiss the appeal even though the point has not been raised by the respondent, since it is wholly without authority to proceed in such a case.³ Likewise, it will dismiss the appeal if it has no jurisdiction over the person of the respondent.⁴

§ 241. Objections of Appellant.—Ordinarily, it seems that the record must show affirmatively the appellant's objections to the rulings of the trial court. Thus, it has been said that a ruling admitting testimony cannot be disturbed where the record merely reveals that objection was made to its admission and was overruled,⁵ for the grounds of the objection must be specified in order that the appellate court may determine whether the ruling of the lower court was correct or otherwise.⁶ Thus, a finding said to rest partly on parol evidence tending to vary the terms of a written agreement will not be reviewed if the record does not show that objection to such proof was made on this ground.⁷ Again, it has been said that where the appellant questions the exclusion of evidence, the record must show that the question was objected to or excluded and that the answer would have been of importance, and not merely that when a statement was objected to, counsel dropped the matter.⁸ In harmony with the rule that an objection must appear in the record is the rule that no express statement is required that a party failed to object to evidence of fraud. If such objection was made, it is the right of the party objecting to show it.⁹ It may be observed, also, that where the appeal is by the plaintiff, the objections and exceptions of the defendant have no place in the record.¹⁰

The record must also show the facts on which a ruling is based before the appellate court will consider an objection thereto,¹¹ and the record should show that an objection to the answer was made by demurrer or otherwise in the court below.¹² An objection that the plaintiff should have been allowed to amend his complaint is of no effect where it does not appear that any application was made to amend it.¹³

§ 242. Exceptions to Ruling.—Except in the cases specified in section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure,¹⁴ an exception must be taken at the time the decision is made, and, if not, the objection to the ruling cannot be urged on appeal.¹⁵ Where the record fails to indicate any such ruling of the trial court or exception taken on behalf of the appellant, the appellate court cannot pass upon any alleged errors of law committed on the trial.¹⁶ If the findings support the judgment, and the record discloses no exceptions to the admission of testimony or to any ruling of the court, the judgment below will be affirmed.¹⁷ Similarly, where, prior to 1909, an appeal was taken because of the modification of an instruction to the jury, it was necessary that the record show that an exception was reserved to the ruling.¹⁸ No particular form of exception, however, seems to be required in the record.¹⁹ Thus a sufficient exception to a charge given to the jury is shown where the statement declares that the party excepted to each part thereof,²⁰ for it is quite unnecessary that the record show an objection of counsel with the reasons therefor, and then an order of the court overruling the objection, and then the words: "We except."¹ Prior to the amendment of section 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1909,² it was required that the record show that an exception was taken to the order of the court granting a nonsuit, and in the absence of such a showing it was presumed that no exception was taken.³ An exception to a nonsuit must appear in the stating or substantive part of the bill of exceptions or statement. It is not sufficient that it be referred to in the assignment of the errors relied on.⁴

§ 243. Waiver of Findings.—It was once said that the record must contain the findings of fact or a showing that they have been waived in order to support the judgment of the court below.⁵ Nevertheless, it is now well settled that the mere nonappearance of findings or a waiver in the record does not necessarily establish the commission of error, for it will be presumed, in favor of the action of the court below, that findings were waived, unless a contrary showing is made.⁶ This presumption is applicable notwithstanding the certificate of the clerk that findings were not waived, for this certificate forms no part of the record which can be noticed on appeal;⁷ and notwithstanding the fact that purported findings, which are not indorsed as filed, are dated after the rendition of the judgment.⁸ The presumption has no application, however, where the court merely makes an insufficient and incorrect finding.⁹ It is not sufficient merely to specify the absence of findings as an error at law in the specifications at the conclusion of the bill of exceptions, for, in the absence of an affirmative showing that findings were not waived, it will be presumed that they were waived.¹⁰

granting or refusing the request.¹² In other words, it should show what the ruling was and what the appeal is from.¹³ Thus, it has been held that alleged delay in service of a notice of intention to move for a new trial which does not appear in the record cannot be considered on appeal.¹⁴ Mere general specifications that the court erred in rendering judgment are not sufficient.¹⁵ When the record upon appeal contains a bill of exceptions, in which is set out what purports to be a copy of the notice of intention to move for a new trial, which designates no proper grounds for the motion, it cannot be presumed, in support of an order granting a new trial, that there was another notice which designated other grounds than those designated in such copy.¹⁶

Moreover, it is essential to the right of an appellate court to review the action of a trial court on a motion for a new trial that it should appear by the record that the ground for a new trial presented in the appellate court was the ground for the motion made in the trial court.¹⁷ Nevertheless, where there is a statement on motion for a new trial or a bill of exceptions containing specifications of error, the presumption is that the specifications and assignments in the statement or bill conform to those in the notice and constitute the grounds upon which the court was asked to grant a new trial.¹⁸

§ 245. Notice of Motion for New Trial.—The rule is well established in California that it is not necessary that the record show that notice was given of a motion for a new trial.¹⁹ This rule applies equally whether the order appealed from was made in a statement of the case or on the minutes of the court.²⁰ If, as a matter of fact, there was no notice as a basis of the motion in the court below, that fact must be affirmatively shown in the record by the party seeking to take advantage of it.¹ Unless he does so, it will be presumed by the appellate court that proper notice was given in due time.²

The early rule required the record to show that notice had been given,³ but this rule was reversed following a statutory change making the notice of a motion for a new trial no longer a part of the judgment-roll.⁴ This statute was held to show the intent of the legislature that the notice should no longer be an essential part of the record.⁵

Nevertheless, if the notice is in fact set forth in the statement or bill of exceptions, and it appears therefrom that it was either insufficient or was not given within the proper time, it then becomes necessary for the appellant to have it appear by the record that this defect was overcome or waived, or it will be assumed, in support of an order denying a new trial, that it was made in consideration of the fact that proper notice had not been given.⁶ Where the transcript contains a duly certified copy of a minute entry showing that a motion for a new trial was denied, and the statement discloses that it was prepared and settled to be used in the motion for new trial, it sufficiently appears by the record that motion was made for a new trial.⁷ Similarly, where the order denying the motion for a new trial recites that a notice of intention was given, it sufficiently appears that such notice was given.⁸

§ 246. Notice of Appeal.—The Code of Civil Procedure explicitly requires that the appellant furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal on an appeal from a final judgment;⁹ on an appeal from a judgment rendered on appeal or from an order generally;¹⁰ and on an appeal from an order granting a new trial.¹¹ This requirement is applicable to records prepared under the alternative method, and a copy of the notice of appeal is, therefore, a necessary part of the record on appeal and should be included in the transcript in all cases.¹²

matter, to be proven by the appellant, for the respondent cannot be expected to prove a negative, that he had no notice.¹⁴ The service of notice must therefore appear affirmatively, or the appellate court cannot take jurisdiction of the case,¹⁵ but must dismiss it.¹⁶ When the transcript contains the judgment and an order denying a new trial, but contains in place of a notice on appeal and evidence of the service of such notice a stipulation that notices of new trial and appeal were duly served and filed in time, it has been held that it is impossible to determine whether such appeal is taken from the judgment or from the order denying a new trial, or both.¹⁷

The requirements that the record contain a notice of appeal and show that it has been served do not seem to be rigorously enforced. Where there is no motion to dismiss the appeal, or where the respondent does not raise the objection that notice of appeal has not been given, it has been held that the appellate court will assume, even in the absence of the required notice of appeal, that the appeal was properly taken, and that the court has jurisdiction thereof.¹⁸ Again, where there is no evidence in the transcript of the service of the motion, the appellant will be allowed to show by proper proof that a sufficient service has been made.¹⁹ Failure to set forth the proper notice of appeal may be corrected on diminution of the record,²⁰ and where the original notice of appeal has been lost, papers showing service may be substituted.¹ It is the fact of service, rather than evidence thereof, which gives the appellate court jurisdiction, and such evidence may be shown in other modes than being incorporated in the transcript.²

§ 247. Filing of Undertaking.—The Code of Civil Procedure provides that the transcript shall be accompanied by

“A certificate of the clerk or attorneys that an undertaking on appeal, in due form, has been properly filed, or a stipulation of the parties waiving an undertaking.”³

The requirements of this section of the code are plain and explicit, and must be complied with,⁴ or the appeal will be dismissed.⁵

The wording of the section requires the clerk to certify to two distinct and separate facts, to wit, that the undertaking is in due form, and that it has been properly filed.⁶ Accordingly, it is insufficient for the clerk merely to certify that “an undertaking in due form is on file in my office,”⁷ or that an “‘undertaking on appeal’ was properly filed in my office,” on a given date.⁸ While it is not required that the exact language of the code be followed in the certificate, it must appear that the undertaking was filed, either "properly," or of a date that shows it was in due time,⁹ and that the paper was not only properly filed, but was also "in due form."¹⁰ These facts appear from a certificate that "a good and sufficient undertaking on appeal in due form was properly filed herein,"¹¹ and from a certificate that "a sufficient undertaking on appeal, in due form of law, was properly filed therein."¹²

It is insufficient to set out the undertaking in the transcript and to have the clerk certify the transcript, for the undertaking is not a part of the transcript, and the certificate that the transcript is correct does not cover the undertaking.¹³ Again, it is insufficient to substitute the affidavit of the appellant, or of the clerk himself, for the certificate required by the code.¹⁴ The fact that the certificate has been entered by the clerk under a different number is immaterial, however, if it is still a part of the records in the same appeal.¹⁵

ing his transcript and brief, could argue his cause upon the record in some other appeal.¹⁶ Consequently, if the plaintiff and the defendant each appeal from different portions of the same judgment, and the parties do not stipulate that either transcript shall be added to the other, each appeal must be heard upon its own transcript.¹⁷ Similarly, if one codefendant appeals, he cannot take advantage of the fact that another codefendant was not served with process.¹⁸ Again, a bill of exceptions prepared by one codefendant who is a respondent upon an appeal cannot be used by another codefendant.¹⁹ Even where two actions have been consolidated in the court below, it has been held that the record in one case cannot be used in the other case if separate appeals have been taken.²⁰ It is not required, however, that there be a separate transcript for each case, provided the transcript sets forth the record for each appeal clearly and distinctly.¹ But in such case each appeal must be accompanied by its own undertaking, which must designate the particular appeal to which it relates.²

Successive appeals.—Where the appellate court, on account of a defect in the proceedings, dismisses an appeal without prejudice, it provides in some cases that if a second appeal be taken, the transcript filed in the first appeal may be used.³ Otherwise, papers used in one appeal cannot be used in another appeal.⁴

Copren Bros.*, 35 Cal. App. 70, 169 Pac. 443 (where the court in fact considered a portion of the transcript of the former appeal, but indicated that it was not required to do so).

§ 249. Miscellaneous Matters.—Many miscellaneous matters must appear in the record. Thus, where it is urged that a writ of attachment is insufficient on account of a failure to state the amount of the claim, the record must contain the writ, and it is insufficient that a portion of it appears in an objection of counsel.⁵ Where a jury is waived, it should distinctly appear from the record whether the whole action, or only the equity part of it, was tried and decided below. Failure to do this is loose practice, which sometimes leads to most perplexing difficulties.⁶ Where the appeal is from the denial of a motion to vacate a judgment, the record must contain the judgment, for the court may have denied the motion on the ground that no judgment had been entered.⁷ Where error is predicated on the court's failure to give certain instructions, they must appear affirmatively in the record.⁸ Where an appeal is taken from an order, a copy of the order appealed from must be in the record or the appeal cannot be considered.⁹

Pleadings.—It is clear that an appeal will be dismissed if it contains no copy of the pleadings.¹⁰ Thus it has been held that the pleadings must be a part of the record presented to the appellate court if it is to examine an order for a nonsuit,¹¹ or an order denying a motion for a new trial.¹² It is not necessary in all cases to bring up the pleadings in full, however, for a summary will in most cases answer every purpose on the appeal.¹³ This summary must be agreed to by the counsel of the respective parties.¹⁴ A stipulation that "the foregoing transcript is correct" does not cure a failure to include the pleadings in the record, for it merely takes the place of the clerk's certificate that the papers to which it is annexed are true copies.¹⁵

Entry of judgment.—Where the appeal is from a judgment, the record must show the entry of the judgment, or the appeal cannot be considered.¹⁶ Where the record does not show the exact date of the entry of judgment, it will be presumed that it was entered before the judgment-roll was made up.¹⁷ While a party entitled to written notice of the entry of a judgment may waive it, evidence of such waiver must appear from the record.¹⁸

Denial of new trial.—Where, under the former practice an appeal might be had from an order denying a new trial, the rule was that it must be determined upon the same record as that presented to the court below.¹⁹ The appellant was required to furnish the court with the statement or affidavits, or both, which were used in the court below upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial.²⁰ Nevertheless, it has been held that where an appeal was taken from an order dismissing a motion for a new trial on the sole ground that the statement was not filed in time, no occasion existed to bring up the statement itself.¹ On appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial, it is not necessary to prepare a new statement, for the original statement, with the judge's certificate as to documents and depositions not included therein, is sufficient.²

III. CONTENTS OF JUDGMENT-ROLL.

§ 250. In General.—A judgment-roll is defined in section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure and consists of the papers therein enumerated.³ This section reads as follows:

“Immediately after entering the judgment, the clerk must attach together and file the following papers, which constitute the judgment-roll:

“1. In case the complaint is not answered by any defendant, the summons, with the affidavit or proof of service; the complaint with a memorandum indorsed thereon that the default of the defendant in not answering was entered, and a copy of the judgment; and in case the service so made is by publication, the affidavit for publication of summons, and the order directing the publication of summons;

“2. In all other cases, the pleadings, all orders striking out any pleading in whole or in part, a copy of the verdict of the jury, or finding of the court or referee, and a copy of any order made on demurrer, or relating to a change of parties, and a copy of the judgment; if there are two or more defendants in the action, and any one of them has allowed judgment to pass against him by default, the summons, with proof of its service, on such defendant; and if the service on such defaulting defendant be by publication, then the affidavit for publication, and the order directing the publication of the summons.”⁴

This section contains all the essentials of the common-law record, omitting the formal parts, such as the placita, memorandum, continuances, and connecting links, some of which have been rendered unnecessary by changes in our proceedings.⁵ It must be remembered that while this section prescribes what shall constitute the judgment-roll, it does not prescribe what shall constitute the record on appeal.⁶ The papers which constitute the judgment-roll in special proceedings, such as petitions in certiorari and mandamus, are treated in other articles.⁷

§ 251. Papers Improperly Submitted.—While the court is bound by the code declaration as to what constitutes the judgment-roll,⁸ it is not bound by the actual papers submitted as a part of the roll.⁹ The circumstance that papers not belonging to the judgment-roll are found commingled with or attached to other papers that do belong to it, creates no embarrassment. The case is one of mixture, not of fusion, and the papers not falling within the statute definition of “judgment-roll” must be treated as of no effect.¹⁰ The judgment-roll does not depend upon the fact that the clerk has fastened certain papers together, nor do other papers which the clerk may have joined with those which the statute declares shall constitute the judgment-roll, become a part of the roll by reason of being so joined.¹¹ Upon an appeal from a judgment, an appellate court is therefore not bound by the papers found in the transcript which counsel claim constitute the judgment-roll, neither is it foreclosed by the certificate of the clerk of the trial court that certain papers therein enumerated form the judgment-roll. If opposing counsel contend that the judgment-roll presented is defective or lacking in material parts, he is entitled to bring such omitted documents, properly certified, before the appellate court, and then it becomes the duty of the court to determine, from all the record before it, what constitutes the judgment-roll in the case.¹² Nevertheless it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the pleadings, order overruling the demurrer, minutes of the court, findings and judgment, contained in the transcript and mentioned in the certificate of the clerk attached thereto as being correct, constitute the judgment-roll; and it is not necessary that the certificate should also state that they constitute the judgment-roll.¹³

§ 252. Proof of Service.—Where a judgment is by default, “proof of service” is part of the judgment-roll.¹⁴ In this connection it has been observed that there are two modes of obtaining jurisdiction over the person of a defendant: First, by personal service of the summons, with a copy of the complaint; second, by constructive service, or what is commonly designated publication of summons.¹⁵ Proof of the former mode of service is the affidavit or certificate of the officer, if the service has been made by an officer, of the fact and the time and place of service; or the affidavit of a citizen, if service has been made by a citizen, showing that he is competent to make the service, and that he in fact made it by delivering to the defendant personally a certified copy of the summons and complaint, stating the time and place.¹⁶ Proof of the latter mode is the affidavit of the printer, or his foreman or principal clerk, showing that publication has been made, stating where and how long, and an affidavit showing a deposit in the postoffice if such deposit was made;¹⁷ and, also, since 1895, the affidavit of the party and the order of the court directing service by publication.¹⁸

Affidavit and order for publication.—Originally, the judgment-roll did not include the affidavit of the party, and the order of the court directing service by publication.¹⁹ The desirability of a change in the statute to include these papers was pointed out by the court in 1868.²⁰ The change was effected by the legislature in 1895 through a provision that the judgment-roll shall include “the affidavit for publication of summons and the order directing the publication of summons.”²¹

Application of rule.—The statutory requirement that the judgment-roll include “proof of service” is applicable to the service of a cross-complaint.² It does not require, however, that the judgment-roll contain proof of an appearance,³ of the service of amended pleadings,⁴ or of the service of the notice of appeal.⁵

§ 253. Pleadings Generally.—By the Code of Civil Procedure, the judgment-roll includes, in case the complaint is not answered by any defendant, “the complaint with a memorandum indorsed thereon that the default of the defendant in not answering was entered,”⁶ and in all other cases, “the pleadings.”⁷ For many purposes a bill of particulars, when made in response to a statutory demand, is an amplification of the complaint. Nevertheless, it is not a part of the judgment-roll.⁸ Similarly, a complaint in intervention, which has not been finally disposed of, but which remains pending upon demurrer and motion to strike out, is not a part of the judgment-roll.⁹ While under circumstances properly disclosed by the record it might appear that an amended pleading should not be considered nor treated as a pleading in the case, and hence, not a part of the judgment-roll, the presumption is that an amended pleading was duly filed and filed with the court’s permission.¹⁰

Orders affecting pleadings.—The code provides that the judgment-roll shall include, in all cases where the complaint is answered, “all orders striking out any pleading in whole or in part, . . . and a copy of any order made on demurrer.”¹¹ The provision that orders striking out pleadings shall constitute a part of the judgment-roll was added by an amendment in 1907.¹² Previously the California rule, established by a long line of judicial decisions, was that motions and orders striking out pleadings did not constitute a part of the judgment-roll.¹³ It still seems to be the California rule that the judgment-roll does not include an order allowing an amended complaint,¹⁴ notice of the overruling of the demurrer to a complaint,¹⁵ a motion for judgment on the pleadings,¹⁶ or a notice of such motion.¹⁷

§ 254. Stricken or Superseded Pleadings.—The general rule in California seems to be that an original pleading, although stricken or superseded by an amended pleading, is nevertheless a part of the judgment-roll.¹⁸ Even where an amended pleading has been filed, the original complaint,¹⁹ the original demurrer,²⁰ and the original answer,¹ are still pleadings in the case, and therefore part of the judgment-roll. While it has been said in a number of cases that an amended pleading supersedes the original,² it has never been held that the original pleading is not a part of the judgment-roll.³ While it can no longer be looked to for the issues to be tried or for admissions, yet in some respects it is still material, as in determining the time when the action was commenced.⁴ Even an answer which is stricken out by order of the court is nevertheless entitled to its position in the judgment-roll.⁵ Certain obiter expressions are to the effect, however, that a superseded pleading is no part of the judgment-roll.⁶ Thus it has been said that where a complaint or answer is amended, only the amended pleadings or those on which the cause was tried form the "pleadings" which are part of the judgment-roll.⁷ And where a demurrer to the original complaint had been sustained and the cause had been tried upon another complaint, it has been said that the original complaint may not be considered by the appellate court for any purpose.⁸

§ 255. Orders and Minutes.—In general, interlocutory orders and proceedings are not part of the judgment-roll.⁹ And until a final judgment is rendered, the judgment-roll cannot be required to be made.¹⁰ The judgment-roll does not include a minute order,¹¹ an order appointing a guardian ad litem,¹² an order disallowing a proposed intervention,¹³ an order setting aside the defendant's default and judgment against him and restoring his answer to the files,¹⁴ or a notice of a motion to dismiss.¹⁵

There is one important exception to the rule that interlocutory orders do not constitute a part of the judgment-roll, for the statute provides that the roll shall include a copy of any order "relating to a change of parties."¹⁶ Consequently, the roll includes an order substituting a different person in place of the original plaintiff,¹⁷ and an order directing that the names of two of the plaintiffs be stricken from the complaint.¹⁸

The minutes of the clerk or of the court are no part of the judgment-roll in California,¹⁹ for they relate neither to an order striking out a pleading nor to one made on demurrer.²⁰ These entries are evidently intended for the guidance of the court in its further action in the cause, and cease to be of value upon the entry of judgment, and therefore cannot be used to impeach the record of the judicial action of the court.¹

§ 256. Verdict and Findings.—The verdict of the jury constitutes a part of the judgment-roll.² Indeed, the code declares "a copy of the verdict of the jury" to be a part of the judgment-roll, in all cases except where the complaint is not answered by any defendant,³ and there is no doubt that this language embraces the special verdicts which absolutely control the general verdicts.⁴

Similarly, the findings are a part of the judgment-roll in all cases except where the complaint is not answered by any defendant,⁵ for the code provides that the roll shall include a copy of the "findings of the court or referee."⁶ When the defendant does not answer the complaint, findings are not necessary, and if made, do not constitute part of the judgment-roll.⁷

When a case is tried by a referee, such papers and no others constitute the judgment-roll as would constitute it if the case had been tried by the court.⁸ Where the report of an ordinary referee is simply a report of the testimony upon which the judge bases his findings it forms no part of the judgment-roll.⁹ But where the finding of a referee is upon the whole issue under section 644 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must stand as the finding of the court and judgment must be entered thereon. This is the finding referred to in section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁰ Thus, the report of a referee upon the first order of reference is not a finding upon the whole issue, which must stand as the finding of the court, and is therefore not a part of the judgment-roll.¹¹

ment,"¹² and it will be observed, by reference to its provision, that a copy of the judgment is a part of the judgment-roll whether judgment is entered by default or after trial.¹³ Indeed, the judgment-roll has been aptly called "the record of the judgment."¹⁴ The "judgment," of which a copy is to be included in the "roll," is the judgment defined in section 577 of the Code of Civil Procedure as "the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action or proceeding."¹⁵ Consequently, there can only be one judgment in the judgment-roll.¹⁶ Where two judgments are tendered as part of the judgment-roll, the appellate court, in the absence of some further showing, will accept the later in point of time as the true judgment, on the presumption that the earlier judgment was set aside and the later judgment substituted for good reason by the court below.¹⁷

An agreed statement of facts, whether it constitutes a part of the judgment-roll or not, may be considered by the appellate court where the judgment recites that it is based on such statement and the statement is set out in full in the record.¹⁸ Recitals in a judgment entered by the clerk are ordinarily immaterial, however, at least on direct appeal. They are not necessary to the judgment, are not ordered by the court, and are frequently but the clerk's exposition of events antedating the judgment.¹⁹

§ 258. Miscellaneous Matters.—Many miscellaneous papers have been held not to constitute parts of the judgment-roll. This conclusion has been reached in California with reference to instructions to the jury,²⁰ the oath or accounts of a receiver,¹ a petition and bond for the removal of a cause to the federal court,² a consent to a judgment,³ a notice of intention to move for a new trial,⁴ a judgment-roll in a former suit between the parties,⁵ and proceedings upon a motion to vacate a judgment on the ground of the alienage of the judge.⁶

None of the evidence introduced upon the trial by either party is a part of the judgment-roll.⁷ Neither is an affidavit of one of the attorneys, objecting to the selection of the jury, a part of the record, although it is copied into the transcript.⁸

Stipulations of the parties ordinarily constitute no part of the judgment-roll.⁹ Nevertheless, where the parties stipulate that the answer of a defendant to an amended complaint be his answer to the complaint when again amended, this stipulation becomes a part of the pleadings and is properly attached to the judgment-roll.¹⁰

Several California decisions state that a bill of exceptions is a part of the judgment-roll.¹¹ This has been true at various times under the Practice Act and the Code of Civil Procedure,¹² but has not been true since the amendment of section 670 in 1907.¹³

The reporter's phonographic transcript of the record, authenticated by the judge, is a part of the judgment-roll, however, under specific provision of the code.¹⁴ The transcript so allowed and certified becomes a part of the judgment-roll only in the same sense that a bill of exceptions was formerly made a part thereof—that is, to serve as part of the record on appeal.¹⁵

IV. NECESSITY FOR OTHER RECORD THAN JUDGMENT-ROLL.

§ 259. General Rule.—The rule is well established in California that matters which are not part of the judgment-roll cannot be considered on appeal unless they are embodied in some other record, such as a bill of exceptions, statement or reporter's transcript,¹⁶ notwithstanding ing there are included in the transcript certain exhibits and orders upon which reliance is made for a reversal of the judgment.¹⁷ As early as 1868 it was said that this proposition had been announced over and over again, times almost without number.¹⁸ Thus it has been said that when an appeal from a judgment is heard upon the judgment-roll alone, nothing can be assumed or considered that does not appear upon the face of that roll. If that discloses error, the appellate court can no more assume that it was cured by some matter which does not appear therein, than it can consider matters outside of the roll for the purpose of impeaching the correctness of the judgment. In each case the record must be judged by itself alone.¹⁹ So, also, it has been said that when an appeal is to be determined upon the judgment-roll alone, all intendments will be made in support of the judgment, and all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to have been regularly taken. If the error relied on to destroy such presumption consists in matters dehors the record, such matters must be brought to the appellate court by bill of exceptions or other appropriate method.²⁰

§ 260. Application Generally.—The rule that matters which are not a part of the judgment-roll will not be reviewed on appeal unless they are presented by bill of exceptions, statement or other record,¹ has been applied to prevent the consideration of many matters, such as a complaint,¹¹ an order dismissing a cross-complaint and directing a judgment to be entered for the plaintiff,¹² an order denying a continuance,¹³ an order appointing a receiver,¹⁴ an order setting aside a default,¹⁵ or an order striking out a notice of motion for a new trial.¹⁶

Orders striking pleadings.—Prior to 1907 the rule was well settled that an appellate court would not review orders striking out pleadings in the absence of a bill of exceptions or statement.¹⁷ It was immaterial that an order “striking out a pleading or a portion thereof,” is deemed to be excepted to by code provision,¹⁸ for an order which is not part of the judgment-roll, no matter how an exception to it may be taken, must be presented by a bill of exceptions,¹⁹ and until 1907 an order striking out a pleading was not a part of the judgment-roll. Since 1907, however, “all orders striking out pleadings in whole or in part” have been part of the judgment-roll,²⁰ and it therefore would seem no longer necessary to present the matter by bill of exceptions, as was the case when such orders formed no part of the judgment-roll.¹

§ 262. Application to Evidence.—The rule is well settled that an appellate court, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, statement or substitute therefor, will not consider the evidence adduced at the trial,² including evidence taken in a probate court.³ Even the evidence in proceedings under an act allowing the lower court to grant a new trial without a bill of exceptions where a proposed statement or bill of exceptions was destroyed by fire⁴ will not be reviewed on appeal without a bill of exceptions.⁵ So, too, the appellate court, in the absence of a bill or statement, will not consider objections to the introduction or exclusion of evidence,⁶ but will assume that all objections to evidence in support of the findings were waived.⁷

The same principle appears in the rule that a failure to find upon an issue, the finding upon which might have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, is not ground for reversal, unless it be shown by a statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to the issue, sufficient to authorize such a finding as would have the effect to invalidate the judgment.⁸ It appears also in the rule that the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings will not be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions,⁹ and in the rule that the correctness of instructions will not be considered unless the evidence is set forth.¹⁰

§ 263. Application to Affidavits and Stipulations.— Since affidavits are not a part of the judgment-roll,¹¹ and since matters which are not included in the judgment-roll will not be considered on appeal unless they are made a part of the record by bill of exceptions, reporter's transcript, statement or similar means,¹² it follows that an appellate court, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, statement or reporter's transcript, will not consider the affidavits used in the lower court.¹³ Thus, it will not consider, in the circumstances just stated, an affidavit of surprise,¹⁴ an affidavit of newly discovered evidence,¹⁵ an affidavit showing the prejudice of the judge,¹⁶ nor affidavits supporting an application for an order of continuance.¹⁷

take into consideration stipulations of the parties unless they are incorporated into the record by a bill, statement or other means.¹⁹ Nevertheless, where the parties recite in their stipulation all the facts in the case and agree that the stipulation shall be part of the judgment-roll, and that no statement on appeal shall be required, the facts therein recited take the place of findings and no other statement on appeal is required.²⁰

§ 264. Matters Shown by Judgment-roll.—Where the whole case appears upon the record, no bill of exceptions or statement is required,¹ for the purpose of a bill of exceptions or a statement is to make that of record which would not be of record otherwise.² The section of the code, providing that on appeal from a final judgment the appellant must furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, of the judgment-roll, and of any bill of exception upon which the the appellant relies,³ does not forbid the hearing of an appeal from a judgment unless there be a bill of exceptions, but only provides that the court shall be furnished with a copy of any bill of exceptions on which the appellant relies.⁴ In this connection it must be remembered that the judgment-roll itself is a record for an appeal, and there may be no occasion for anything further to present the question raised.⁵ Consequently, where the grounds for appeal appear in the judgment-roll, no bill of exceptions or statement of the case is required.⁶ Neither is a bill of exceptions or statement necessary where a conclusion of law is not legitimately drawn from a finding of facts;⁷ or where the question is, Do the findings sustain the judgment?⁸ or on an appeal from an order denying a motion to change the place of trial;⁹ or on an appeal from an order refusing an injunction.¹⁰ Similarly, a bill of exceptions is not necessary to show an exception taken to an order where a statement of the fact which raises the exception is included in the order.¹¹ Thus, on appeal from a judgment on account of the erroneous overruling of a demurrer, no bill of exceptions is necessary if the transcript contains the demurrer, the order of the court overruling it, and the judgment, in which is recited the demurrer, the ruling thereon, and the exception taken thereto.¹²

§ 265. Matters Shown Otherwise Than by Bill or Statement.—Reference to the cases cited in the preceding sections will show that the courts, in affirming the necessity of a record other than the judgment-roll, have usually declared in terms that a bill of exceptions or statement is necessary. It seems that such declarations mean no more than that some record other than the judgment-roll is required, bills and statements having been the only other record provided during the greater part of the judicial history of California.¹³ It is clear that no bill of exceptions or statement of the case is required where a statutory substitute is duly provided, such as the clerk's transcript of the case under the original Practice Act,¹⁴ the reporter's transcript of the case under the present provisions of the code,¹⁵ or a statement on motion for new trial.¹⁶ An affidavit, however, cannot be used to supply any matter which should have been presented in either a statement of the evidence or bill of exceptions.¹⁷ Similarly, an allegation that the judge omitted to settle a statement submitted to him cannot be taken as a substitute for the statement, nor does it constitute a reason for reversing the judgment.¹⁸ Furthermore, when the appeal is from an order denying a new trial and an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment, it is not necessary that the orders appealed from should be contained in any bill of exceptions or statement. Copies of the orders appealed from certified by the clerk, together with a copy of the notice of appeal, are all that are requisite to sustain the appeal from such orders. It may be that without a bill of exceptions or statement showing facts upon which error in making the order is apparent, the appellant is not likely to succeed upon his appeal, but this goes to the question of the merits of the appeal and does not warrant a dismissal.¹⁹

for the ends of justice to do so, the appellate court will consider the expressions as synonymous.¹ Consequently, a document which is in fact a bill of exceptions may be so considered, although it is entitled a "proposed statement on appeal,"² or a "statement of the case."³ Conversely, a document which is in fact a statement of the case, may be so considered although it is entitled a "bill of exceptions."⁴ As the reason for this rule, it has been said that the legal effect of a document is to be determined upon a consideration of the matter which it contains, rather than by the name which is given to it, and the document is not to be disregarded merely upon the ground that it is erroneously entitled, or is without any title.⁵ Where the document submitted, however, recites that it was prepared under the code provisions relating to reporter's transcripts, it would be flying in the face of the record to hold that it may be regarded as a bill of exceptions.⁶

The judgment-roll does not include bills of exception at the present time, although it did so from 1862 to 1874 and from 1876 to 1907.⁷ An extract from the minutes of the clerk, signed by the judge in the course of the proceedings from day to day, is not a bill of exceptions.⁸

The certificate of the judge who tried the cause, made eight years after the trial, to the effect that he believed the exceptions taken were correctly noted in the clerk's minutes, cannot supply the place of a bill of exceptions.⁹

§ 267. Purpose.—The purpose of a bill of exceptions is to preserve a record of the rulings and decisions of the lower court for the benefit of the appellate tribunal;¹⁰ or, in other words, to make a record of that which without it would not constitute a part of the record.¹¹ By such action, matter which is not record by the general law attains the sanction and verity which enables the revising court to consider it.¹² Bills of exception were unknown to the common law, and were created by a statute of 13 Edw. I to enable appellate courts to review errors in law which did not appear on the face of the record.¹³ Under the Practice Act, bills of exceptions were used only on appeals from judgment, and could not be used on appeals from orders. Under the Code of Civil Procedure, however, bills of exception are equally applicable to any and all kinds of appeals, including appeals from final judgments and appeals from orders granting a new trial.¹⁴ Thus it has been said that upon an appeal from an order striking out affidavits for a motion for a new trial, the aggrieved party is entitled to a bill of exceptions presenting the proceedings and rulings of the lower court in such shape that the action of such court may be reviewed by the appellate tribunal.¹⁵ So, also, it has been held that a bill of exceptions may be used to review a ruling of the lower court as to costs,¹⁶ or a ruling on a motion for a nonsuit,¹⁷ or a ruling made during the trial of an issue of law.¹⁸ There is no statutory requirement that a bill of exceptions shall specify the purpose for which it is prepared or settled, and the document when settled is therefore available for any purpose authorized by the code.¹⁹ It is to be observed, however, that a bill of exceptions prepared by one codefendant who has not appealed cannot be used by his codefendant.²⁰

Matters to be Included.

§ 268. In General.—When a bill of exceptions is necessary, it must always contain a statement of the facts which will authorize the appellate court to review the action of the court below.¹ With reference to the contents of the draft of the bill of exceptions which must be submitted by the party desiring to have a bill settled, the Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provisions:

“Such draft must contain all the exceptions and proceedings taken upon which the party relies, and may contain all matters reviewable on the same appeal whether occurring at the trial or on motion for a new trial. It may also contain a statement of any matters occurring upon the trial, in the presence of the court, showing any of the matters mentioned in subdivisions one and two of section six hundred fifty-seven of this code.”²

Nevertheless, it must be remembered that a bill of exceptions is only necessary to place that on the record which, without it, does not go on the record.³ That which is a record already cannot receive a higher degree of sanction by being made a record a second time.⁴ Consequently, items which are already a matter of record, such as pleadings and judgment which constitute a portion of the judgment-roll, should be excluded from the bill of exceptions.⁵ Thus on an appeal from a judgment, neither the findings of fact and conclusions of law, nor the decree entered thereon, nor the notice of appeal, with proof of service, nor the recital that a sufficient undertaking on appeal had been filed with the clerk, can be properly included in a bill of exceptions. The two first are already matters of record, and do not need the authentication of the judge in a bill of exceptions in order to have them considered upon appeal; and the notice of appeal and undertaking on appeal are made subsequent to the matter appealed from, and can in no way have affected the action of the court.⁶ An original complaint, however, although superseded by amended complaints, is properly brought up by a bill of exceptions, since it is a document on file in the action.⁷

Furthermore, it is not the purpose of a bill to include errors committed in favor of the prevailing party.⁸

§ 269. Exceptions Taken.—A bill of exceptions has always been a well-known means of preserving exceptions.⁹ Indeed, statements of facts in a bill of exceptions are made only to explain the exceptions which it shows were taken.¹⁰ To challenge a ruling of the lower court, the bill of exceptions must affirmatively show, by statement in the substantive part of the bill, that the ruling assigned as error actually took place at the trial and was excepted to.¹¹ Thus, on appeal from a judgment on the pleadings, the bill of exceptions must show that the appellant excepted to the order granting the motion for judgment, or that he was absent from court when the order was granted, in which case the order is deemed to have been excepted to.¹² Furthermore, to make an exception effectual in a bill of exceptions, the objection should be stated, and also the ground upon which it is made. If it was made upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the decision, the deficiencies of the evidence should be specifically stated. The mere statement in a bill of exceptions, that a party excepted to a decision of the court, unaccompanied by the objection and the grounds—whether of law or of fact—upon which it was made, does not constitute an exception upon which any question involved is examinable by the appellate court.¹³ Nevertheless, in the preparation of a bill of exceptions, only such errors as the moving party deems essential to present his grounds of reversal, and so much of the evidence as is necessary to explain them, are to be included.¹⁴

ing up the evidence on appeal.¹⁶ Indeed, the statute plainly requires that the bill, when it sets forth exceptions to a verdict or other decision, upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, must state the objection with so much of the evidence or other matter as is necessary to explain it, and no more.¹⁷ The actual evidence should be brought up in the bill of exceptions, rather than the judge's conclusions from it,¹⁸ but the testimony should be reduced to proper form.¹⁹ If the bill refers to a deed printed in the transcript, the deed must be identified in the bill.²⁰ If the respondent interferes to deprive the appellant of the power of furnishing the required evidence by losing or destroying a document, the facts in regard to the document, the respect in which it is deemed material, and its importance in determining the issues in the case should be stated as far as possible.¹

Evidence not presented below.—Only such evidence can be inserted in the bill of exceptions as was heard by the trial court, or was offered and excluded. To permit an appellant to insert in his bill of exceptions any matter of evidence not actually heard by the lower court would work great injustice both to the court and to the opposite party. It would present to the appellate court a case which might be entirely different from the one presented to and decided by the court below. Consequently, papers which were not put in evidence in the trial court cannot be considered on appeal although they are included in a bill of exceptions and although they were referred to and commented upon at the trial.² In this connection, it has been held that a bill of exceptions which says that a paper was offered in evidence does not show that the paper was

are made only to explain the exceptions which it shows were taken.¹⁰ To challenge a ruling of the lower court, the bill of exceptions must affirmatively show, by statement in the substantive part of the bill, that the ruling assigned as error actually took place at the trial and was excepted to.¹¹ Thus, on appeal from a judgment on the pleadings, the bill of exceptions must show that the appellant excepted to the order granting the motion for judgment, or that he was absent from court when the order was granted, in which case the order is deemed to have been excepted to.¹² Furthermore, to make an exception effectual in a bill of exceptions, the objection should be stated, and also the ground upon which it is made. If it was made upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the decision, the deficiencies of the evidence should be specifically stated. The mere statement in a bill of exceptions, that a party excepted to a decision of the court, unaccompanied by the objection and the grounds—whether of law or of fact—upon which it was made, does not constitute an exception upon which any question involved is examinable by the appellate court.¹³ Nevertheless, in the preparation of a bill of exceptions, only such errors as the moving party deems essential to present his grounds of reversal, and so much of the evidence as is necessary to explain them, are to be included.¹⁴

ing up the evidence on appeal.¹⁶ Indeed, the statute plainly requires that the bill, when it sets forth exceptions to a verdict or other decision, upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, must state the objection with so much of the evidence or other matter as is necessary to explain it, and no more.¹⁷ The actual evidence should be brought up in the bill of exceptions, rather than the judge's conclusions from it,¹⁸ but the testimony should be reduced to proper form.¹⁹ If the bill refers to a deed printed in the transcript, the deed must be identified in the bill.²⁰ If the respondent interferes to deprive the appellant of the power of furnishing the required evidence by losing or destroying a document, the facts in regard to the document, the respect in which it is deemed material, and its importance in determining the issues in the case should be stated as far as possible.¹

Evidence not presented below.—Only such evidence can be inserted in the bill of exceptions as was heard by the trial court, or was offered and excluded. To permit an appellant to insert in his bill of exceptions any matter of evidence not actually heard by the lower court would work great injustice both to the court and to the opposite party. It would present to the appellate court a case which might be entirely different from the one presented to and decided by the court below. Consequently, papers which were not put in evidence in the trial court cannot be considered on appeal although they are included in a bill of exceptions and although they were referred to and commented upon at the trial.² In this connection, it has been held that a bill of exceptions which says that a paper was offered in evidence does not show that the paper was read in evidence.³ Nevertheless, a statement in a bill of exceptions that a writing was offered in evidence, and that an objection was interposed and overruled, is equivalent to a statement that the writing was admitted in evidence, although a direct statement would be more satisfactory.⁴

§ 271. Reduction of Testimony.—In setting forth the evidence in a bill of exceptions, two things are to be avoided. The first is making the bill merely a copy of the reporter's transcript, without any effort to reduce the testimony to proper form for the purpose of presenting the questions involved.⁵ The second is making it a mere skeleton, so bald that it cannot in any true sense be regarded as a bill.⁶ In either case, settlement of such a bill may be refused and the bill returned for correction.⁷

It is a rule which should, so far as possible, be followed in making up a bill of exceptions to make as short and succinct a statement of the evidence as possible, either in narrative form, giving its substance, or by stating what the evidence tended to establish.⁸ Nevertheless, there are frequent instances where neither of these methods is wholly appropriate and adequate to express exactly what a witness has said. In such case it becomes necessary to state the evidence by question and answer, although not strictly required for the purpose of pointing an exception, but to lay before the court the exact statement of the witness.⁹ In attempting to reduce the testimony to narrative form, every lawyer, even the most experienced, is liable to err on one side or the other, and usually his error is in the direction of unnecessary prolixity.¹⁰

§ 272. Miscellaneous Matters.—In a number of cases the California courts have passed upon the inclusion of miscellaneous matters in bills of exception. Thus they have held that upon an appeal from an election contest, the appellant must include in his bill of exceptions all the errors of the court below upon which he relies for reversal.¹¹ Only the ballots specifically objected to in the bill of exceptions can be considered.¹² Again, upon an appeal from an order striking out affidavits supporting a motion for a new trial, the affidavits stricken out would necessarily constitute the most material part of such a bill of exceptions.¹³ So in a bill of exceptions to an order denying a continuance, it is not sufficient to present the alleged error in denying the continuance, unless it contains the affidavits used on the hearing of the motion.¹⁴ Furthermore, instructions of the lower court to the jury, if erroneous, constitute “error at law occurring at the trial,” and should be embodied in the bill of exceptions.¹⁵

Nevertheless, where an alleged departure from the due and orderly method of disposition of an action is not evidenced by a ruling or order that may be made the subject of an exception, an attempted statement of the error is not within the proper scope of a bill of exceptions.¹⁶ On an appeal from a judgment, the bill should not include matters occurring subsequent to the date of the judg-

Reference should be made to later portions of this article for the rules that the bill should include assignment and specification of errors,¹⁸ and affidavits, documents, papers and other matter which require identification and authentication.¹⁹

Authentication by party.—A bill of exceptions must be authenticated in some form, either by the signature or the indorsement of the attorney, or of the party, if he appear in person. A proposed draft, unless it shows upon its face or by proper indorsement that it is prepared by a party to the cause, is only waste paper, and no one need notice it.²⁰

Settlement in General.

§ 273. Proceedings for Settlement.—Proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions are “proceedings in an action.”¹ The rule in respect to the preparation and settling of bills of exception is similar to that which prevails in reference to statements on appeal and on motion for new trial.² Illustrative cases on the settlement of statements on appeal are cited in the following sections; and cases involving the preparation of statements on motion for new trial will be found in another article in this work.³ Parties making a bill of exceptions in order to comply with rule XXIX of the supreme court may follow the practice prescribed by sections 650 and 651 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁴

Service of settled bill.—Under section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1907, it was required that a bill of exceptions, “upon being certified, must within five days thereafter be served upon the adverse party.”⁵ This provision may have been merely directory,⁶ and was certainly inapplicable if no amendments to the original bill were ever proposed,⁷ either through no amendments being proposed or through acceptance of the amendments by the person proposing the bill.⁸

§ 274. Service of Draft.—Under section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the draft of a bill of exceptions, or a copy thereof, must, within ten days after notice of entry of judgment, be served upon the adverse party.⁹ No doubt the phrase “adverse party” is to be given the same interpretation when applied to the service of bills of exception as is given when it is applied to the service of notice of appeal;¹⁰ that is, it must be served upon every party whose interest in the subject matter of the appeal is adverse to or will be affected by the reversal or modification of the judgment or order from which the appeal has been taken.¹¹ Consequently, it has been held that a bill of exceptions to an order dismissing petitions for partial distribution by children not provided for in a will must be served on the devisees named in the will who appeared and opposed the petition.¹²

A failure to serve adverse parties does not require or authorize the judge to refuse to settle the bill,¹³ nor does it affect the jurisdiction of the appellate court to consider the appeal.¹⁴ If it appears to the appellate court that the matters presented cannot be considered by reason of failure to serve adverse parties, their rights can be protected.¹⁵ To do this, it is not necessary to dismiss the appeal, but merely to refuse to consider the bill of exceptions,¹⁶ or to consider it and to modify the judgment in so far as it may be modified without impairing the rights of the parties not served.¹⁷

The service of a bill of exceptions by delivery to an express company for transmission to the attorney of the adverse party in another city constitutes "personal service." The delivery of the notice through such agency renders the service personal, and the proof of such delivery establishes a personal service.¹⁸

§ 275. Proposal of Amendments.—The code provides that the adverse party, within ten days after the service of the draft of a proposed bill of exceptions, "may propose amendments thereto, and serve the same or a copy thereof upon the other party."¹⁹ Where an appeal is taken from a decision made before the settlement of a bill of exceptions, the allowing of an amendment to the bill, by the insertion of specifications of the particulars in which it is claimed that the findings and decree of the court are not sustained by the evidence, is proper, as the effect of the amendment is simply to enable the appellate court to review the decision of the trial court, in view of all the facts which the trial court had before it when it made such decision.²⁰ On the other hand, a bill of exceptions on motion for a new trial cannot be amended by the respondent after the trial court has passed upon and denied the appellants' motion for a new trial.¹ The appeal deprives the superior court of jurisdiction to set aside its order denying the new trial, and while that order is in force the record upon which it is based cannot be changed. The appellate court must review the order upon the same record upon which it was made.² It will not be presumed on appeal that amendments were proposed to the draft of a bill of exceptions.³ Nevertheless, it may be noted that the judge is not precluded from making the bill conform to the facts by reason of the failure on the part of the opposite party to propose such amendments to the draft as will cause the same to correctly represent what transpired before him.⁴

§ 276. Presentation for Settlement.—Within ten days after the service of the amendments, the proposed bill and amendments must be presented by the party seeking the settlement of the bill to the judge, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge.⁵ It is necessary for the party seeking the settlement of the bill of exceptions—in other words, the party taking the appeal and desiring and intending to use such bill in support of his appeal—to present the bill, with any amendments proposed thereto, to the judge who tried the case, or to the clerk for the judge, for settlement.⁶ This presentation must be made within the time required by law, or settlement cannot be required.⁷ The mere delivery of the bill to the judge pending the time allowed by law or by the stipulation of the parties within which amendments might be proposed and before the same had been proposed, there being no agreement by the parties that the bill might be so presented, would not be a presenting of the bill to the judge for settlement, for, in such case, the judge would have no legal right to fix or designate a day for its settlement or to settle it.⁸ In fact, the burden is cast upon the proponents of a bill of exceptions to bring it to hearing and determination even after they have left it with the clerk for the judge,⁹ for the judge is not required to act in the premises until requested to do so by one of the parties to the suit, and although it would be competent for either party to obtain from him an order fixing the day for settlement, the prevailing party is under no obligation to take any step in aid of the other party.¹⁰

§ 277. Necessity for Judge's Signature.—A bill of exceptions does not become effective until it is settled by the judge,¹¹ and a bill which is not authenticated in any manner cannot be considered on appeal.¹² Indeed, a bill of exceptions is not really settled until it has been certified to as correct.¹³ Prior to the adoption of the code it was said that a bill of exceptions should be signed by the judge, or agreed to by the parties,¹⁴ but the code requires that the bill be settled by the judge who presided at the trial, instead of by agreement of the parties.¹⁵ Nevertheless, it seems that a party may, by stipulation, waive the signature of the judge or referee.¹⁶ It must appear from the record, therefore, that the bill of exceptions was settled and signed by the judge who tried the case, or was concurred in by stipulation of the parties.¹⁷

Settlement by the clerk is insufficient,¹⁸ for his statement in respect to the decisions of the court is entirely uncalled for by the statute, and cannot be regarded. If parties wish to bring the rulings of the court during the progress of a trial under review, they must take some other course than leaving it to the clerk to ascertain and settle what such rulings were.¹⁹

When the decision excepted to is made by a tribunal other than a court,²⁰ or is made by a judicial officer other than a judge,¹ the bill of exceptions is to be presented to and settled and signed by such tribunal or officer.

§ 278. Proper Judge to Sign.—The Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provision:

“A judge or judicial officer may settle and sign a bill of exceptions after, as well as before, he ceases to be such judge or judicial officer. If such judge or judicial officer, before the bill of exceptions is settled, dies, is removed from office, becomes disqualified, is absent from the state, or refuses to settle the bill of exceptions, or if no mode is provided by law for the settlement of the same, it shall be settled and certified in such manner as the supreme court may, by its order or rules, direct.”²

The provision that the judge may settle a bill of exceptions after he ceases to be a judge has been held constitutional as against the objection that it confers the power to do a judicial act upon one who is no longer a judicial officer,³ since this power has been repeatedly recognized by the California courts.⁴ Indeed, it has been said that where a bill of exceptions, instead of being settled by the judge who tried the case, is settled by his successor, it cannot be considered by the appellate court.⁵ Nevertheless, one who has ceased to be a judge cannot be compelled to settle a proposed bill.⁶ And a judge, after the expiration of his term, is utterly without power to make an order in diminution of the record, as by adding specifications of error to a settled bill, even by stipulation of the counsel for the parties.⁷

Settlement by several judges.—Where different judges act during the progress of a cause, it is the duty of the litigant desiring to have a ruling or decision reviewed upon appeal to present a bill of exceptions embodying the matters excepted to before one of the judges to the judge who made the ruling or decision for settlement by him, either at the time of the ruling, or after judgment; and, in such case, two or more bills of exceptions may be settled and properly presented for consideration upon ap-exceptions, or uncertified record under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, may be settled and certified by his successor in office; or, if he be disqualified, by a judge of the same or an adjoining county. peal.⁸ In this connection it should be observed that where the successor of the judge who tried an action denies a motion for a new trial, a bill of exceptions on an appeal from the order denying the motion should be settled by the judge who made the order, and not by his predecessor who tried the action.⁹ The underlying thought seems to be that it is the duty of a litigant desiring to have a ruling or decision reviewed, to present the bill of exceptions, embodying the matters excepted to, to the judge who made the ruling or decision for settlement by him. That judge alone can know the facts upon which he exercised his judgment, and, therefore, he alone, under our system, can properly settle the bill,¹⁰ except where some disqualification or disability under the statute exists.

§ 279. Effect of Settlement.—When a bill of exceptions has been settled and allowed by the judge before whom the proceedings were had, it must for all purposes of reviewing the action of the lower court, be deemed by the appellate court to be a correct statement of what took place.¹¹ It must be assumed that the judge, in settling the bill, has caused to be inserted therein all matter which is relevant to a ruling to which exception has been taken, or will explain the same.¹² Consequently, the appellate court must treat the summary of the evidence set forth in the certified bill as a correct statement,¹³ and it will not entertain proceedings to amend a bill which has been certified and engrossed.¹⁴ Similarly, facts stated in a settled bill of exceptions must be accepted as true, for the purposes of the appeal.¹⁵ Whether or not the bill has been correctly engrossed so as to embody all that the judge at the time of the actual settlement ordered incorporated in it, is a matter to be determined at the time the engrossed bill is presented for certification;¹⁶ and the judge's certification of the same is a determination that it is correctly engrossed.¹⁷

Nevertheless, where an opinion of the lower court is contained in a bill of exceptions, it only settles the fact that such opinion was rendered and filed, and cannot be regarded as determining that the recitals contained in it are true.¹⁸ Furthermore, a stipulation agreeing to a bill of exceptions, signed by the attorney for certain defendants does not bind other defendants, although the judge, in allowing the bill, certifies that it was "agreed to by the respective attorneys." This statement merely means that it was agreed by the parties whose attorneys signed the stipulation.¹⁹ It should not be understood that everything that is contained in a bill of exceptions is always to be considered by an appellate court in reviewing the action of the court below. It may frequently happen that irrelevant matters are incorporated in the bill, and the bill itself may show upon its face that the matters therein recited were not presented to the court at the time it made its rulings, or could not have any weight in determining the correctness of such rulings. The appellate court will consider only such matters as by the bill of exceptions itself purport to be pertinent, and to have been considered by the court below.²⁰

Notice to Adverse Party.

§ 280. When Necessary.—The Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provision with respect to notice of settlement:

“The proposed bill and amendments must, within ten days [after service of the proposed amendments] be presented by the party seeking the settlement of the bill, to the judge who tried or heard the case, upon five days’ notice to the adverse party, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge.”¹

There may be some confusion or contradiction in the terms of this section, but upon the point that the adverse party is to have notice of the proceedings to settle the bill there is no doubt. This requirement is not simply directory.² Indeed, where the papers are presented to the judge, rather than delivered to the clerk, notice to the adverse party is as necessary as the presentation of the bill to the judge.³ If proper notice has not been served on the adverse party, the judge need not settle the bill,⁴ for no judge is authorized to settle or certify to a bill of exceptions without the presence of or notice to the opposite party.⁵ If he does so, it is error,⁶ and the bill will not be considered on appeal.⁷ The requirement of notice applies to proceedings under the new method of appeal, although no service of the notice of appeal is required;⁸ but it does not apply if the proposed bill and amendments are delivered to the clerk for the judge under the alternative procedure stated in the code provision just quoted, nor in certain other circumstances.⁹ An affidavit that the affiant left a true copy of the notice at the office of the attorneys of the adverse party does not prove the service of such notice, in the absence of a showing of compliance with all the requirements of the code and the existence of the conditions authorizing service in the mode adopted.¹⁰

§ 281. When Unnecessary.—Where the proposed bill and amendments are not presented to the judge, but are delivered to the clerk for the judge, under the alternative step provided in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure,¹¹ no notice of settlement is required from the party seeking the settlement of the bill.¹² The obvious purpose of the provision is that the parties may have notice of the time when the statement will be settled. When the papers are presented directly to the judge, there is no provision for any notice of the time of settlement to be thereafter given by either the judge or clerk; and in such case, therefore, the five days' notice must be given by the party himself. But when the papers are delivered to the clerk for the judge, the purpose of the code is effected through the requirement that then the judge must designate a time for the settlement, and the clerk must give notice of it. The provision about the five days' notice therefore qualifies only the preceding clause of the sentence, and is not applicable to the case when the papers are delivered to the clerk for the judge.¹³

Again, when there is no controversy with regard to amendments, no notice of the settlement of the bill need be served on the adverse party,¹⁴ for section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provision:

“If no amendments are served, or if served are allowed, the proposed bill may be presented, with the amendments, if any, to the judge or referee for settlement, without notice to the adverse party.”

Furthermore, notice is not required if the bill is presented at the time the ruling excepted to is made, pursuant to section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁵ After adjournment of court, however, a bill cannot be settled on ex parte application without notice to the adverse party.¹⁶

§ 282. Waiver of Notice.—The written notice provided for in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure is for the benefit of the adverse party, and may be waived by him.¹⁷ Thus, if he appears and without objection participates in the settlement of the bill, he cannot be permitted afterward to say that it was not properly settled, because written notice was not given. Similarly, if he consents to a time designated by the court or judge for the settlement, he cannot be permitted, when that time arrives, to say that the bill should not be settled, because a written notice has not been served.¹⁸ So, also, if he appears and consents without objecting to several continu-

The opinion in this case, while rendered with particular reference to the old statutory provision as to the settlement of statements on motion for new trial, seems also applicable to the corresponding statutory provision as to the settlement of bills of exception, and was so considered in *Horton v. ances of the hearing, he waives any right he may have had to challenge the sufficiency of the notice through which he appeared.¹⁹ If the failure of the judge to fix a time for the settlement and give previous notice thereof can ever invalidate the settlement of a bill when the attorneys for both parties are actually present, it certainly cannot have that effect, unless, at the time, objection be made on that ground.²⁰ On the other hand, it should be noted that the fact that certain adverse parties have appeared at a hearing to settle a bill does not excuse the failure to serve notice on other adverse parties, even if the latter do not complain.¹

Time for Presentation and Settlement.

§ 283. Time for Presentation Generally.—A party who has excepted to a decision of a court, whether he excepts in person at the time the decision was made or is deemed in law to have excepted, must, in statutory or reasonable time after his exception, avail himself of the right to reduce the same to writing, and take the steps required by law to have the bill of exceptions settled and signed by the judge.² If the bill is not presented in time, the judge is not required to settle it,³ and the bill must be disregarded.⁴ Indeed, unless the delay has been the result of arrangement by the attorneys for their accommodation,⁵ or has been waived by the parties,⁶ or relieved by the court,⁷ or unless there is some showing why the bill was not prepared in time,⁸ the judge is without jurisdiction to settle the bill, and if he does so, it cannot be considered upon appeal.⁹

Nevertheless, when a trial court is in doubt as to the right of a party to have a bill of exceptions settled, because the same has not been presented within time, the better practice is for the trial court to sign the bill of exceptions subject to objections thereto, the evidence in support of which should be incorporated in a bill of exceptions, so that the appellate court upon appeal will be in a position to determine whether or not such bill was presented for signature within time.¹⁰ This rule is no doubt based upon the theory that it is the policy of the law to protect the right of appeal, which might in certain cases be materially affected or destroyed by a refusal of the court to sign the bill, and that if, upon the appeal, it is made to appear that the bill was not presented within the time required, it is within the province of the court

v. Masten, 101 Cal. 651, 36 Pac. 130. In the case Coast Lumber Co. v. Wood, supra, it was held that the failure of a moving party to deliver amendments with the proposed statement to the clerk within the time prescribed by the law is in effect an adoption of such amendments in which case the statement may be settled within a reasonable time thereafter and the trial court does not lose jurisdiction to make such settlement.

to dismiss the appeal, or to refuse to entertain questions involved therein.¹¹

Showing on appeal.—A mere objection to the settlement of a bill, in the absence of a showing that it was not presented in time does not authorize the appellate court to disregard the bill, for that court must presume that it was regularly settled.¹² Consequently, it is the duty of a respondent who urges that the bill was not presented in time to have matter incorporated therein in making such a showing affirmatively,¹³ unless it appears on the face of the record that the date of presentation was too late.¹⁴ Where this fact appears, it will not be presumed that there were sufficient reasons presented to the lower court to excuse the delay;¹⁵ and if such facts exist, the appellant should therefore incorporate them in his bill.¹⁶ Where there is a dispute as to the party upon whom it is claimed that the bill was not served in time, the determination of this question of fact is primarily for the trial tribunal, subject to review by the appellate court to the same extent only as its determination of other questions of fact.¹⁷

§ 284. Statutory Periods.—Where no order extending the time for the presentation of a bill of exceptions is applied for or granted,¹⁸ the time for presentation is the time prescribed by law. There is no specific time fixed by law for presenting a bill of exceptions for settlement, unless it be found in sections 649 and 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁹ Under section 649, an appellant should present his bill of exception at the time of the ruling excepted to, and under section 650, after the judgment.²⁰ Each of these statutory provisions is independent of the other, and the appellant may take advantage of either one. Thus, where he asks for a settlement within the time prescribed after the decision excepted to, it is immaterial that he has acted before the judgment or order appealed from was rendered.¹ Similarly, where he asks for a settlement within the time prescribed after judgment, it is immaterial that the time for requesting a settlement under the other procedure has passed.² Section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure, allowing settlement after a decision, is in terms permissive, and the privilege granted the party of presenting his bill of exceptions for settlement at the time of the ruling is not necessarily exclusive.³

The code does not prescribe the time within which a bill of exceptions to an order of family allowance must be presented and approved. Such a bill must be presented within a reasonable time after constructive notice of the order. What is a reasonable time is to be determined by the judge upon all the facts and circumstances.⁴

§ 285. After Decision.—Section 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provision:

“A bill containing the exception to any decision may be presented to the court or judge, for settlement at any time after the decision is made, but the same must be presented within ten days after written notice of making such decision, and after having been settled must be signed by the judge and filed with the clerk.”

This section permits the bill of exceptions to be settled at the time the decision is made, although the order appealed from has not been entered.⁵ It applies to an exception to an appealable order rendered before final judgment as well as to a nonappealable order rendered before judgment.⁶ Where the party proceeds under this section, and the certificate of the judge recites that the bill was “duly presented within the time allowed by law,” it must be assumed that the bill was presented when the decision was made.⁷ It will be observed that the ten-day period does not commence to run until written notice of the decision excepted to. Under this provision a party is justified in waiting until he has explicit notice before presenting his bill of exceptions. Incidental knowledge and indefinite information is insufficient.⁸

after written notice of making such decision,"¹⁰ this section did not fix any specific time for presenting a bill for settlement, but only declared that the act might be done immediately upon the rendering of the decision to which the exception is taken.¹¹ It contemplated the settlement at the time the decision was made during the trial and in the presence of counsel for both parties. It did not contemplate a settlement of the bill after the adjournment of court, and without any notice to adverse counsel.¹² Since it would frequently be extremely inconvenient to make up a bill of exceptions instantaneously,¹³ it was the rule that a bill of exceptions ought to be settled and allowed if presented within a reasonable time after the order excepted to,¹⁴ and the analogy furnished by sections 650 and 651 determined what was a reasonable time.¹⁵

§ 286. After Judgment.—Under the Practice Act, it was required that bills of exception be taken and settled at the trial,¹⁶ or, in other words, that the exception be reduced to writing and settled by the judge immediately upon its taking.¹⁷ There was no provision for a bill of exceptions to be settled after judgment.¹⁸ There is no doubt, however, that section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the settlement of bills of exception based on errors of law occurring at the trial of the cause, and that this may be done after the entry of judgment, and after the judgment-roll has been made up by the clerk.¹⁹

This section, in so far as it relates to the time for the presentation of a bill of exceptions, reads as follows:

“When a party desires to have exceptions taken at a trial settled in a bill of exceptions, he may, at any time thereafter, and within ten days after the entry of judgment, if the action was tried with a jury, or after receiving notice of the entry of judgment, if the action was tried without a jury, or if proceedings on motion for a new trial be pending, within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion, or other determination thereof, or such further time as the court in which the action is pending, or a judge thereof, may allow, prepare the draft of a bill, and serve the same, or a copy thereof, upon the adverse party. . . . Within ten days after such service the adverse party may propose amendments thereto, and serve the same or a copy thereof, upon the other party. The proposed bill and amendments must, within ten days thereafter, be presented by the party seeking the settlement of the bill, to the judge who tried or heard the case, upon five days’ notice to the adverse party, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge.”

Unless the draft is served and the proposed bill is presented within the time provided by the section, the appellant has no right to have it settled.²⁰

§ 287. Application of Code Provision.—Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure fixes the time for the presentation of all bills of exception, including exceptions taken in the course of proceedings before the trial has commenced, and exceptions taken after judgment.¹ Indeed, section 651 of the same code reads:

“Exceptions to any decision made after judgment may be presented to the judge at the time of such decision, and be settled or noted, as provided in section six hundred and forty-nine, or a bill thereof may be presented and settled afterward, as provided in section six hundred and fifty, and within like periods after entry of the order, upon appeal from which such decision is reviewable.”

Under the provisions of section 650, a party is entitled to ten days after the day on which judgment is entered to prepare and serve his draft of a bill of exceptions.² As there can be only one judgment in an action, it follows that if for any reason a judgment that has been entered is vacated, and another judgment entered in lieu thereof, this last judgment becomes the only one in the case, and the notice of its entry is the point of time from which the right to have a bill of exceptions settled begins to run. For this purpose there is no distinction between a judgment rendered by a trial court upon its original determination of the cause and a judgment which it enters in obedience to the direction of the appellate tribunal.³ It will be observed that where no amendments are proposed, or, if proposed, are acceded to, there is no time stated within which the bill must be presented for settlement.⁴ If the party seeking the bill objects to the proposed amendments until after the time for presentation has expired, his subsequent acceptance of them is unavailing to procure a settlement of the bill after the court had declined to settle it.⁵

The ten days' time "after notice of decision" denying a motion for new trial or "other termination" of such a motion, within which a party may serve a proposed bill of exceptions commences to run immediately upon the failure of the trial court to pass on the motion within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of decision of the court.⁶

§ 288. Time for Settlement.—The time within which the judge may settle a bill after it has been presented to him is not fixed by statute.⁷ It is only required of counsel that the proposed bill be presented within the time allowed by law, and if the court actually settles it at a date later than its presentation, this cannot affect the right of the appellant.⁸ Indeed, the practice of proposing a bill in skeleton form is possible simply because no absolute limit is placed upon the time within which the judge can certify to the bill.⁹ In any case, it is clear that an objection that a bill was not settled until sixteen days after amendments thereto had been proposed cannot be considered on appeal when no objection was taken in the court below,¹⁰ and that a party cannot be charged with laches in the matter of the settlement of his proposed bill when he does all in his power to secure a settlement, and the delay is due to the objections of the adverse party and the rulings of the judges in sustaining the same.¹¹ Indeed, it is no objection to a bill of exceptions that it was not settled until after appeal was taken, for its settlement may have been postponed by orrance, 143 Cal. 14, 76 Pac. 717, 793—cases where, on a delayed presentation, there appeared to be no opposition to the amendments).

der of the trial judge for sufficient reasons, and it must be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that this was the case.¹² In this connection it may be noted that the trial court has jurisdiction of the settlement of a bill of exceptions although an appeal has been taken from the judgment.¹³

Extension of Time.

§ 289. In General.—Section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the following provision relating to the extension of time for presenting bills of exceptions:

“Where an act to be done, as provided in this code, relates to . . . the preparation of bills of exceptions, or of amendments thereto, . . . the time allowed by this code, unless otherwise expressly provided, may be extended, upon good cause being shown; . . . but such extension shall not exceed thirty days, without the consent of the adverse party.”¹⁴

Pursuant to this statutory provision, the time for presenting a bill of exceptions may be extended within the limits of thirty days,¹⁵ in addition to the ten days ordinarily allowed.¹⁶ The order of extension must be granted, however, before the end of the ten-day period allowed by law,¹⁷ and the period of extension must not exceed thirty days.¹⁸ An order granting an extension of twenty days' time in which to file a bill is an adjudication that the period as extended is a reasonable time.¹⁹

In harmony with the general rule that failure to present a bill within the required time must be explained by the appellant, if it appears on the face of the record,²⁰ it has been said by the supreme court that if the respondents, objecting to the settlement of the bill of exceptions, rely upon the lapse of the period limited by the statute, it becomes the duty of the appellant to incorporate into the bill the matter going to excuse his apparent delay, such as an extension of time, and that otherwise the exceptions, though settled, cannot be considered on appeal.¹ But where there is nothing in the transcript to show that any objection was made, the appellate court will presume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, in favor of the regularity of the action of the lower court, that a bill of exceptions was properly settled, and therefore that the time was extended by stipulation or order of the court.²

§ 290. Time for Order of Extension.—To be effective, an order extending the time for the presentation of a bill of exceptions must be made before the expiration of the period otherwise allowed.³ The order of a judge granting an extension of time after the expiration of the statutory period within which to propose a bill is ineffectual and void, and is properly ignored by the court.⁴ In this connection it has been held that an order extending the time in which a party may present a bill of exceptions for an appeal does not extend the time in which he may present a bill for a motion for new trial, and therefore that an order extending the period for presenting the latter bill is too late if made more than ten days after notice of intention to move for a new trial, although made before the expiration of the extended period for the bill for appeal.⁵

Nevertheless, when the time for service expires on Sunday, the court may extend the time by an order made on the following Monday. A bill served on Monday would have been in time, in view of section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the court had power on that day to extend the time.⁶ Furthermore, where the adverse party, after several unauthorized extensions by the court, stipulates for a further extension, or accepts the draft within the extended period, he is estopped from objecting to the allowance and settlement of the bill on the ground that it was presented too late.⁷

An order extending the time for service of a proposed bill of exceptions may be made in advance of the judgment.⁸

§ 291. Period of Extension Allowed.—Section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not allow the court to extend the period for presenting a bill of exceptions for more than thirty days beyond the time allowed by law without the consent of the other party.⁹ It cannot be construed as declaring that the court cannot grant an extension of more than thirty days at any one time, but that it may make several extensions of thirty days each, and thus extend the time for more than thirty days.¹⁰ Such construction would be in direct violation of the language of the section, and contrary to previous decisions of the court.¹¹ The provision in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the draft of the bill may be prepared and served within ten days after the entry of judgment, "or such further time as the court in which the action is pending, or a judge thereof, may allow," does not authorize the court to grant an indefinite extension of time for the preparation and serving of the draft, but is to be read in connection with the restriction in section 1054 upon the amount of time which may be allowed by the court.¹²

While the total period of extension must not exceed thirty days, there is no rule against successive orders, each made within the period already allowed, providing for a series of extensions aggregating not more than thirty days. Thus it is permissible to have three orders, each extending the time allowed for ten days.¹³

Waiver of Default and Relief Therefrom.

§ 292. Waiver by Party.—The rule is well established that delay in the presentation of a bill of exceptions may be waived by the adverse party.¹⁴ As the reason for this rule, it has been said that jurisdiction of the subject matter does not depend on prompt service of a bill of exceptions, as it does in the case of a notice of intention to move for a new trial.¹⁵ In fact, where the adverse party desires to avail himself of the objection that a bill of exceptions was not presented in time, he must interpose it in the trial court, or he cannot do so on appeal.¹⁶

Waiver of delay may be found in participation in proceedings for settlement without raising an objection as to the time of presentation,¹⁷ or in a stipulation for an extension of time.¹⁸ It has been shown, on an appeal from a judgment, though not on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, by means of a supplemental bill of exceptions.¹⁹ No waiver can be found, however, in the acceptance of service or in a stipulation for a hearing if the party expressly reserves the right to object to the delay.²⁰

§ 293. Relief by Court.—Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

“The court may, . . . upon such terms as may be just, relieve a party or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.”

Under this section the rule is now well established that it is entirely within the power of the trial court, upon application in that behalf made within the proper time and upon a sufficient showing, to relieve a party from the effects of his mere failure to serve his proposed bill of exceptions within the prescribed time, where objection to the settlement is made on that ground, and thereupon to settle the bill.¹ In appropriate cases, the lower court may make its order of relief conditional.³ If a motion for relief from default has not been made, but is merely contemplated, it cannot be said that there is a proceeding pending for such relief.³

The question as to whether the facts are such as to warrant relief, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from delay in serving or presenting a bill of exceptions, is primarily one for the trial court, and that court is vested with a large discretion in such matters,⁴ although its decision in this regard is appealable.⁵ Consequently, an order granting such relief will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that the court or judge was guilty of gross abuse of discretion in making it.⁶ While the correctness of the ruling may be doubted, nevertheless an appellate court will not substitute its own opinion and thereby divest the trial court of that discretionary power reposed in it.⁷ This is true whether the application be granted or denied.⁸ Indeed, in cases of doubt, the court ought to resolve the doubt in favor of the application, so that the full merits of the litigation may be presented.⁹ Furthermore, since a large discretion is vested in the trial court, the appellate court will not command it to grant relief by use of a writ of mandate.¹⁰

§ 294. Circumstances Justifying Relief.—Several illustrations may be given of circumstances justifying the lower court in relieving a party from the effect of his failure to serve or present a bill of exceptions in time. Thus, the court may relieve a party from his failure to serve the draft of a bill of exceptions in time where the delay was due to the excusable inadvertence of the attorney in misreading a stipulation providing for an extension of the time,¹¹ or in entering the last day for serving notice of intention to move for a new trial,¹² or to his error in thinking that his managing clerk had in due time obtained an order of extension.¹³ So, also, the court may relieve a party from an omission to file a bill of exceptions and amendments in time where it is shown that they were mailed to the clerk in due time and that they did not reach him because they were lost in transmission through the mail;¹⁴ or when it is shown that they were presented one day late, due to the excusable inadvertence of the attorney.¹⁵

On the other hand, relief is not justified where the appellant was ignorant of the limitation of time allowed, and did not advise with his attorneys on the subject, but allowed the time to pass while engaged in unsuccessful negotiations to effect a compromise.¹⁶ Where the grounds for asking relief amount to little more than excusable forgetfulness or failure to observe the flight of time, arising out of occupation in other cases, the facts are such as to justify the court either in granting or refusing the motion without such abuse of discretion in either case as would warrant reversal.¹⁷

§ 295. Time of Application for Relief.—Since proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions are “proceedings in an action,”¹⁸ an application to amend or correct a settled bill must be made within the period of limitation prescribed for proceedings by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁹ This section in terms limits the cases in which relief may be granted to those wherein the application for relief is made within a reasonable time, and in no case “exceeding six months after such judgment, order, or proceeding was taken.” Nevertheless, application may be made more than six months after the default and the service of the bill, for the relief is not from the failure to serve the bill on time, but rather from some proceeding of the adverse party, or some order of the court, based thereon. While it has been said that there is no reason why one who finds himself in default may not anticipate the objection or proceeding to be taken against him based thereon, and make his application for relief at once, it has been held that the application is not too late if made at the time the objection based on the default is presented to the court, or within a reasonable time thereafter.²⁰ It has been held that the relief sought under section 473 may be granted after the expiration of the statutory period if the proceedings for relief were commenced within that time.¹ The order so given is certainly not void, and is conclusive where no appeal was taken therefrom.²

§ 296. Right to Mandamus.—The rule is well established in California that if the trial judge refuses without cause to settle a bill of exceptions, he may be compelled to take action by a writ of mandamus.³ As the reason for the availability of mandamus, it has been said that the settlement of a bill of exceptions is an act which the law requires the judge to perform, a duty resulting from his office.⁴ In the early days it was said that the remedy by appeal, if it exist, is inadequate;⁵ and in the later days it has been said that mandamus is the exclusive remedy,⁶ since a wrongful refusal to settle a bill is not the subject of an appeal,⁷ nor of a proceeding under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure to require settlement by the supreme court.⁸ The petition for writ of mandamus should allege in substance that the proposed bill contained everything that the petitioner honestly believed it should contain in order to make it a fair and proper draft of a bill.⁹

Limitation on right.—A writ of mandamus will not issue to compel the settlement of the bill of exceptions in any particular way,¹⁰ for the judge cannot be compelled to settle any particular bill or to insert or exclude any particular facts.¹¹ A judge may be compelled to act by mandate, but his discretion cannot be controlled thereby.¹² Thus, where the judge, complying with a writ of mandate, has settled a bill of exceptions, the writ is § 297. Circumstances Excluding Right.—Although a petition for a writ of mandamus is the proper remedy following a wrongful refusal to settle a bill of exceptions,¹⁴ mandamus is not available in all circumstances. Thus, it has been held that if a judge refuses to settle a bill, and an application for mandamus against him is dismissed for want of prosecution, a writ of mandamus will not be issued to compel settlement by his successor in office.¹⁵ Neither will it be issued to compel a settlement by a former judge.¹⁶ Again, mandamus will not lie to compel the settlement of a bill where the evidence is conflicting as to whether or not it was presented in time;¹⁷ or where the facts are such as to preclude a settlement.¹⁸ Furthermore, where a petition asks for a mandamus requiring the settlement of a bill of exceptions containing certain affidavits, the alternative writ will be discharged, and the peremptory writ denied, if it is shown that one of the affidavits covered should not be included in the bill.¹⁹ A writ of mandamus will not be issued by the dis-

strict court of appeal to compel the settlement of a bill to be used on an appeal which lies to the supreme court.²⁰

Absence of substantial need.—It is a rule of law that the writ of mandate will not issue where it would be of no benefit to the applicant, and that a mere abstract right, unattended by any substantial benefit, will not be enforced by mandamus.¹ It would be a vain thing, of course, to settle a bill of exceptions if there is no appeal, and a petition for mandamus, if presented after the time for appeal has expired, will therefore be denied unless it shows that an appeal has been taken.² Similarly, the petition will be denied if it appears, from the filing of the transcript on appeal, that the bill of exceptions has been settled by the trial judge.³

Relief from delay and laches.—The trial court cannot be compelled by mandamus to relieve a party, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from the consequences of his failure to serve or present his bill of exceptions within the time required by law, for whether or not such relief is to be granted is a matter resting in the discretion of the trial court.⁴ Neither can the trial court be compelled to relieve the party seeking a bill from the effect of his laches in failing to be present at the time appointed for settlement and in delaying a subsequent attempt to secure the signature of the judge.⁵

§ 298. Settlement by Former Judge.—While the California court has recognized that the legislature may authorize a former judge to settle a bill of exceptions after he has ceased to be a judge,⁶ it has held that the legislature cannot compel the former judge to do so,⁷ and that mandamus will not lie to compel such a settlement.⁸ As the reason for this rule, it has been said that the legislature cannot enjoin upon a private citizen the duty of settling a bill of exceptions, nor require a person who has been a judge to continue to discharge judicial duties after his term of office has expired.⁹

The code provides that if the

“Judge or judicial officer [who made the decision excepted to], before the bill of exceptions is settled, dies, is removed from office, becomes disqualified, is absent from the state, or refuses to settle the bill of exceptions, or if no mode is provided for the settlement of the same, it shall be settled and certified in such manner as the supreme court may, by its orders or rules, direct.”¹⁰

Since one who has ceased to be a judge cannot be compelled to settle a bill, and since the supreme court for some time did not adopt a rule directing the manner in which settlement should be had, it was held that the appellant should make special application to the supreme court for an order directing the settlement. This step should be taken promptly and within a reasonable time after the appellant is informed that the former judge refuses settlement.¹¹ It seems that the appellant might also present his bill to the succeeding judge, and that mandamus would lie to compel a settlement by him.¹² A rule of the supreme court now provides that the bill “may be settled and certified by the judge’s successor in office, or if he is disqualified, by a judge of the same or an adjoining county."¹³

§ 299. Facts Precluding Settlement.—Obviously, mandamus will not issue to compel the settlement of a bill of exceptions if the facts are such as to justify the trial judge in refusing the settlement.¹⁴ In this connection, it may be observed that a bill of exceptions need not be settled if it is not signed by the attorney or the party offering it,¹⁵ if there is an absence of evidence of the required notice to the adverse party,¹⁶ or if the party presenting it has not paid the jury fees as required by statute.¹⁷ Of course a bill of exceptions need not be settled if it is not presented within the time required,¹⁸ or if the testimony is not properly reduced.¹⁹ Again, it is good reason for refusing to settle a bill that the counsel for the party seeking it were not present at the time fixed for settlement and thereafter withdrew the draft and amendments from the control of the judge and held them for a considerable period without excuse for the delay.²⁰ Finally, the judge cannot be required to certify to a bill which he knows to be incorrect,¹ and a writ of mandate will be refused when the instrument submitted does not show an attempt to present such a fair and bona fide statement of the case as entitles it to be considered and settled as a bill of exceptions.²

§ 300. Facts not Precluding Settlement.—In general, it is the duty of the trial judge to facilitate, rather than to obstruct, a party in his efforts to have the errors in the decree, if there were any, corrected upon the appeal.³ Accordingly, it has been held that a bill of exceptions, if presented within the time required, should be settled by the trial judge, notwithstanding the fact that it is entitled “plaintiff’s proposed statement on appeal,”⁴ that an account-book which should be a part of the bill has been mutilated,⁵ that the bill contains no request for certification and settlement,⁶ that the fees of the shorthand reporter have not been paid,⁷ that all of the adverse parties have not been served therewith,⁸ or that settlement was refused by the judge’s predecessor in office.⁹ Furthermore, the judge should not refuse to settle a bill because it is not an ideal bill when it is first presented,¹⁰ even if it is inaccurate, untrue in many respects, meager and partial,¹¹ nor should he refuse settlement because he believes that the bill will not be considered on appeal,¹² nor that the decision appealed from does not affect the right of the moving party.¹³ A judge should not refuse his certificate because the bill has been filed without it. Such a filing is premature and unauthorized, and if a timely request is made for a certificate of allowance, it should be granted.¹⁴ Neither should he refuse to settle the bill unless he is furnished with a transcription of the reporter's notes, even though he has forgotten many matters with the lapse of time. This difficulty can be obviated by having the reporter read to the judge the notes taken at the trial.¹⁵

§ 301. Reduction of Testimony.—Where the proposed bill is either merely a copy of the reporter's transcript, without any effort to reduce to proper form for the purpose of presenting the questions involved, or where it is a mere skeleton, so bald of the essential requisites of the bill contemplated by the statute that it cannot in any true sense be regarded as such, it may be disregarded, and a settlement of it will not be required.¹⁶ This doctrine, however, is a harsh and rigid one, and if inconsiderately applied, would be liable to great abuse, and might operate as a virtual denial of justice to a party, solely through the ignorance, incompetency or indolence of counsel, for which he may be in no way responsible. For these reasons it should not be extended to cases not falling strictly within the class to which it has heretofore been held to apply. Even in such cases it would be better, as a general rule, if the judge of the trial court, disregarding as far as possible technical objections, should endeavor to settle the bill rather than refuse it. For this purpose it is not necessary that the labor of making a proper bill of exceptions should be assumed by the judge. The party presenting the objectionable bill could be required by the judge to put it in proper shape, giving a reasonable time for such purpose.¹⁷ If the document presented is not in reality a bill of exceptions, that fact should be called to the attention of the attorney presenting it; the judge should inform him that for such reason the document will not be considered as a bill of exceptions, and that he must prepare a real bill within a reasonable time.¹⁸

Settlement by Supreme Court.

§ 302. In General.—Where the trial judge, in settling a bill of exceptions, refuses to allow one or more exceptions which, in accordance with the facts, ought to be allowed, the remedy is by petition to the supreme court, as provided in section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure.¹⁹

This section reads as follows:

“If the judge in any case refuses to allow a bill of exceptions in accordance with the facts, the party desiring the bill settled may apply by petition to the supreme court to prove the same; the application may be made in the mode and manner, and under such regulations as that court may prescribe; and the bill, when proven, must be certified by the chief justice as correct, and filed with the clerk of the court in which the action was tried, and when so filed it has the same force and effect as if settled by the judge who tried the cause.'"²⁰

The supreme court has never made formal rules governing applications to prove exceptions,¹ but the construction of the foregoing section, both as to the extent of the power which it confers on the supreme court, and the proper practice in invoking that power, have been settled by judicial decisions. As to the extent of the powers of the supreme court, the construction has been rather strict, but so far as the mode of procedure is concerned the practice has been sufficiently liberal.²

§ 303. Function of District Courts of Appeal.—Section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing for the settlement of bills of exception which are refused by the trial judge, in terms extends the right of settlement only to the supreme court,³ and in practice all of the cases for settlement under this section appear to have been taken to that tribunal.⁴ It is to be observed, however, that the amendments to the state constitution which created the district courts of appeal include the following provision:

20. Prior to 1907, the first clause of the code section above quoted contained "an exception" instead of "a bill of exceptions." Section 189 of the Practice Act was the same on this subject as section 652 of the code (Landers v. Landers, 82 Cal. 480, 23 Pac. 126), and the provision in section 1174 of the Penal Code is like that in section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure (People v. Bitancourt, 73 Cal. 1, 14 Pac. 372), except that it prescribes the method of proving the bill before

4. See, generally, the cases cited, §§ 302-309.

“All statutes now in force allowing, providing for, or regulating appeals to the supreme court shall apply to appeals to the district courts of appeal, so far as such statutes are not inconsistent with this article and until the legislature shall provide otherwise.”⁵

It has been said that the provisions for proving exceptions, both under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 1174 of the Penal Code, being merely incidental to appeal, fall within the meaning of this clause of the constitution, and that proceedings under these sections, and all others relating to the mode of presenting appeals or stay of proceedings pending appeal, are properly cognizable in the “district court of appeal having jurisdiction under the constitution of the particular cause by direct appeal from the trial court.”⁶ This construction of the constitutional provision under consideration has been twice applied to proceedings to prove exceptions in criminal cases under section 1174 of the Penal Code,⁷ and, as already indicated, would seem equally applicable to proceedings to prove exceptions in civil cases under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure.⁸

§ 304. Application in General.—Section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application except where the judge has refused to allow an exception which he has the power to allow.⁹ Consequently, it does not apply where the moving party seeks to insert in the bill of exceptions matter which is not within the proper scope of the bill;¹⁰ or when an attorney representing the petitioner has waived the petitioner’s right to except;¹¹ or where the judge, after erroneously sustaining an objec-

Moreover, section 652 does not apply where there is a dispute between the attorney for the party seeking the bill and the presiding judge as to what evidence was introduced,¹⁴ for on this question the determination of the judge, evidenced by the bill or statement settled by him, is conclusive.¹⁵ If it be an evil that a statement of what evidence was introduced, made by a judge who presided over the trial, and who acts in his judicial character and under his judicial oath, cannot be overcome by the contradictory statement of somebody else, it must be put into the large class of evils (real or imaginary) which the supreme court has no jurisdiction to remedy.¹⁶ Nevertheless, under section 652, the court may grant a request, in an election contest, that ballots which have been introduced in evidence and which are sufficiently identified be certified as a part of the bill of exceptions.¹⁷

§ 305. Refusal of Settlement.—Section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not intended to apply, and does not apply, to the case where a trial judge has refused to settle a bill of exceptions.¹⁸ The contention that it does so apply has been repeatedly and distinctly overruled in the cases in which it has been held that for such refusal the remedy is by mandamus.¹⁹ All that the statute provides is, that when the judge has refused to allow an exception according to the facts—that is to say, when he has refused to allow that a particular ruling was made and excepted to, when in fact it was made and excepted to—the party aggrieved may then apply to the supreme court to prove that he did reserve an exception to such ruling, and in that connection, and as a necessary incident, may prove and have allowed the evidence and other matters material to the exception.²⁰ It refers solely to a case where the judge is charged with having refused to allow an exception; that is, where a party claims that he made “an objection upon a matter of law to a decision made” by the court, and took an exception to the decision, and the court refused to certify, in a bill or statement, that such an exception was taken, or that such an occurrence took place. In such a case, the party may prove, if he is able, in the supreme court, that he did take such exception, and may prove, no doubt, in that connection, sufficient surrounding facts to show what the point of the exception is.¹

§ 306. Preparation of New Bill.—The duty and power of settling bills of exception rest generally and properly in the judge of the trial court. The supreme court can interfere only in the cases provided by statute, and the only case thus provided is found in section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure.² It is not the purpose of this provision to require the supreme court to discharge the duties of the judge of the court below,³ and since the power of the supreme court must be confined within the limits prescribed by the code,⁴ it follows that the supreme court cannot substitute itself for the court below in the settlement of a general bill of exceptions.⁵ It is not the meaning of the code that the supreme court, with a few general averments before it about the conduct in the premises of the judge of the trial court, will put itself generally in the place of that court and proceed to construct an original and complete bill of exceptions.⁶ Thus, it has been held that the supreme court has no power to remodel a bill of exceptions by striking out matters contained therein on the ground that they are incorrectly stated,⁷ or by adding other matters thereto which may have been improperly omitted,⁸ or by reviewing the determination of the trial judge as to the allowance of proposed amendments to the bill.⁹ And when an exception to a particular ruling has been allowed, the supreme court has no authority to strike out any evidence or other matters stated in connection with such ruling upon the ground that such evidence was not given, or that such matters are untruly or incorrectly stated; and it is equally without authority to add to the statement of the ruling and exception contained in the settled bill any evidence or other matters which may be alleged to have been improperly omitted therefrom.¹⁰ The final result of all the decisions is that when a bill of exceptions has been settled by the trial judge, the bill so settled is complete and unchangeable as to every exception therein contained. If the judge has put in incorrect statements of evidence or other matters bearing upon his rulings, or has omitted evidence or other matters claimed to be material, the evil is not remediable in the appellate court.¹¹

§ 307. Procedure in General.—The supreme court has prescribed no formal regulations governing applications to prove exceptions,¹² but the result of the California cases has been to indicate the proper practice.¹³ As soon as the trial judge has concluded the settlement of the proposed bill of exceptions and directed its engrossment with the omission of an exception or exceptions which the party seeking the allowance of the bill claims to have reserved, the right to apply to the supreme court for relief under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure has accrued, and the application should be made with reasonable promptitude.¹⁴ Notice of the application should be served on the judge,¹⁵ and also on the attorney of the adverse party.¹⁶ The party seeking the allowance of exceptions which the trial judge has refused to allow must present his whole case in his original petition, or at least before a hearing upon a reference to take the testimony and report, for amendments to the petition will not be allowed thereafter. The whole proceeding is anomalous, and when conducted in the most methodical and expeditious manner makes a demand upon the time of the supreme court, which interferes most seriously with the performance of its more legitimate and more imperative duties as defined by the constitution.¹⁷

§ 308. Contents of Petition.—It cannot be held that a judge has refused to allow an exception unless it is shown that he has been properly requested to allow it, and, therefore, the petition for leave to prove an exception should show that the petitioner has taken the proper steps to procure the settlement of a bill of exceptions; that he included in his proposed bill a statement of the particular exception which he desires to prove; and that the judge in settling the bill refused to allow that he had taken such exception.¹⁸ Where it is not averred in the petition that the court refused to allow the exceptions mentioned, but it merely appears that there were slight and immaterial differences between the petitioner and the judge as to the precise circumstances under which the exceptions were taken, the petition will be denied.¹⁹ The petition should set forth the statements of the bill as settled by the judge of the trial court, which are alleged to be contrary to the facts, together with a statement of the facts and the point of the exceptions. A mere statement in the petition that the bill as settled by the trial judge does not state sufficient of the testimony of witnesses to explain the questions to which objections or exceptions were taken, is insufficient.²⁰

The petitioner should set forth fully and specifically the very exception or exceptions which he presented to the judge, and which he avers the judge wrongfully refused to put into the bill; and also, the evidence upon which he bases the truth of his proposed exceptions, so that the supreme court can see on the face of the petition what his alleged grievance is.¹ This requires only a general statement of the tendency of the evidence, so that the materiality of the ruling alleged to have been excepted to may appear.²

Where the original petition is held insufficient because it does not include the exceptions taken and evidence in support thereof, and leave is given to file an amended petition, the amended petition is sufficient if it has annexed thereto, and made a part thereof as an exhibit, a writing containing the evidence, rulings and exceptions taken in the court below.³

§ 309. Determination and Settlement.—Where a petition for settlement by the supreme court presents a direct issue as to the accuracy of the bill as settled, the petitioner should be allowed to prove the truth of the issue, and a commissioner of the court may be appointed to take the proofs and report the same with his findings thereon.⁴

A petition for leave to prove an exception will be denied where it appears, from the evidence upon an issue of fact as to the alleged matter of exception taken before a referee appointed by the supreme court, that the allegations of the petition are not established by the preponderance of evidence.⁵ Moreover, where the evidence is directly conflicting as to whether the exceptions in question were taken, the supreme court cannot hold that the superior judge erred or abused his discretion in not allowing them, and would not be warranted in holding that they should be included in the bill.⁶

On the other hand, if the petitioner succeeds in making his proof, his exception will be put into a bill, certified by the supreme court through its chief justice, and filed with the clerk below, where it will take its place among the other things which constitute the record on appeal.⁷ It should be noted, however, that where the parties file written consent to changes in the proposed bill, a settlement by the supreme court is unnecessary, and the proceeding will be dismissed without prejudice to a further application in the event the changes consented to are not in fact made.⁸

VI. ORIGINAL METHOD OF PREPARING TRANSCRIPT.

In General.

§ 310. Use and Necessity.—Causes brought before the court on appeal are heard on a transcript of the record of the court below or a portion thereof, the transcript being made up and the documents of which it is composed being authenticated before it reaches the appellate court.⁹ The transcript on appeal is but the statutory method of bringing to the attention of the court the particular proceedings which took place in the trial court and which the appellate court is asked to review, and this is the sole purpose and function of the transcript.¹⁰

Whether the appeal itself is taken by the original method or by the alternative method, the transcript may be prepared by the original method,¹¹ for the alternative method of appeal is independent from the alternative method of preparing the record on appeal.¹²

The statute makes it the duty of the appellant to furnish the transcript, and it is his duty to furnish a complete transcript, clean, properly arranged, and properly authenticated.¹³ Portions of the record which have been accidentally omitted may be corrected on suggestion of diminution of the record,¹⁴ but where such a diminution has been suggested and an order issued directing the clerk to certify up the part desired, it is still the duty of the appellant to see that the order is complied with. Until he does so, he has not furnished the court with the transcript which the law contemplates and requires him to furnish.¹⁵

§ 311. Single Transcript for Several Appeals.—Where several appeals are taken in one case by the same party, only one transcript is required, provided the record upon which each appeal is heard is as clearly distinct as if set forth in a separate transcript.¹⁶ Indeed, a single transcript is permissible even where there are separate, independent appellants.¹⁷ There is no rule, however, providing for an order of court requiring that two appeals be heard on a single transcript, and if one appellant declines to stipulate that a single transcript be used, he cannot complain if the costs of the second transcript are assessed against him.¹⁸ Furthermore, it is not permissible to stipulate that the relevant parts of a transcript filed in one case may be considered in another case, for under this mode the work of counsel is imposed on the appellate court.¹⁹

Appeal from judgment and denial of new trial.—Under the former practice, where an appeal was taken from a judgment, and also from an order denying a motion for new trial, only one transcript was required, even if the appeals were taken at different times, and even in the absence of an order or stipulation to this effect.²⁰ This result followed from a rule of the supreme court which provided that “an appeal from a judgment and from any order denying a new trial of the issues may in all cases be presented upon the same transcript.”¹

§ 312. Use of Transcript of Another Party.—Where two parties to an action prosecute separate appeals from the judgment or decision therein, the transcript prepared by one party cannot be used in the consideration of the appeal taken by the other, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect or a consolidation of the appeals.² As the reason for this rule, it has been said that each party taking an appeal must present his own record with especial reference to the errors of which he complains. The respondent can only be called upon to respond to the record which the appellant serves upon him and files in the case. If that record does not present all of the record in the court below favorable to his side, he has the opportunity to correct it by suggesting a diminution of the record. He would have no opportunity to protect himself if, after briefs have been filed, he should find the cause argued, not on the transcript served on him and filed in the cause, but upon the record in some other appeal prepared with reference to other errors, which may in no way affect him, and which he may in fact know nothing about.³ By application of this rule it has been held that if the plaintiff and defendant each appeal from different portions of the same judgment and the causes are not consolidated in the appellate court and the parties do not stipulate that either transcript may be added to the other, the appeal of the plaintiff must be heard on the transcript filed therein, without the aid of that filed in the appeal taken by the defendant.⁴

Sufficiency of Matters Included.

§ 313. In General.—Sections 950, 951 and 952 of the Code of Civil Procedure provide that the appellant must furnish copies of certain papers to the appellate court, and these papers must be set out in and become a part of the transcript.⁵ On an appeal from an order made after final judgment, the transcript should contain a copy of the order appealed from, and copies of all the papers used in the hearing when the order was made by the court below.⁶ Upon an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction, the order must be furnished in the transcript.⁷

But where the appeal is taken on the judgment-roll, without a bill of exceptions, or substitute therefor, matters which are not a part of the judgment-roll constitute no part of the record on appeal,⁸ and have no place in the transcript.⁹ A copy of the minutes of the court, as kept by the clerk, should not be inserted in the transcript,¹⁰ and neither should the undertaking on appeal,¹¹ nor memoranda of exceptions taken in the progress of the cause and signed by the judge.¹²

It is important that a transcript should not be swollen to unnecessary bulk, but should be sufficient to serve the purpose intended. Thus it has been said, on the one hand, that it is reprehensible, although common practice, to stuff a transcript with irrelevant and unnecessary matter.¹³ Swelling the record by the insertion of useless material imposes an unnecessary labor on the court, and a great additional expense upon the parties, and cannot be too strongly condemned.¹⁴ And it has been held, on the other hand, that an appeal will be dismissed where the transcript is so scanty that it would be useless to attempt an examination of the cause upon its merits and impossible to determine whether the error assigned exists or not.¹⁵ The transcript should always contain enough of the record of the court below to present fully the question appealed and show the materiality of the point relied on to reverse the judgment or order.¹⁶ The appellant is not authorized to leave out any portion unless upon stipulation of the other party. He is not authorized to assume that any part is immaterial and omit it.¹⁷ Thus, where the transcript does not show that the findings of fact and conclusions of law have been signed by the judge or filed with the clerk, or that judgment has been entered thereon, the appeal will be dismissed.¹⁸

§ 314. Judgment-roll.—It is required that on appeal from a final judgment the appellate court be furnished with a copy of the judgment-roll,¹⁹ and it is provided that an appeal may be dismissed if the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers.²⁰ Consequently, it has been held that a transcript which does not contain a copy of the judgment-roll is fatally deficient in that respect, and that an appeal thereon will be dismissed.¹ Nevertheless, it has been pointed out that it would be unjust to dismiss an appeal merely because some part of the roll has been, perhaps inadvertently, omitted from the transcript. If the omission be deemed material, the respondent can easily remedy the supposed defect by suggestion of a diminution of the record.²

Furthermore, it seems to be the rule that it is not necessary in all cases to bring up the entire judgment-roll in the transcript.³ Thus, where an amended complaint and answer thereto form the issues tried, the original pleadings and summons may be omitted, as no question arises on them.⁴ The practice often pursued by parties, or clerks, of copying into the transcript all the orders and minutes of the court below is reprehensible in the extreme. It only involves parties in expenses which are utterly useless, and imposes great labor on the appellate court in endeavoring to ascertain what part of the transcript is really before it.⁵

Nevertheless, under the former practice, it was required, on an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, that the judgment-roll, or at least a copy of the final judgment, be in the transcript.⁶ And where an appeal is taken from a judgment, or from an order made after final judgment, the transcript must contain the judgment,⁷ and the pleadings,⁸ or the appeal will be dismissed.⁹

§ 315. Condensation of Papers and Evidence.—In many cases a summary statement of papers and evidence is sufficient. Thus, it has been said that the transcript should state briefly the substance and effect of conveyances and records, instead of inserting them at full length.¹⁰ Similarly the courts advise that the transcript state only so much of the substance of the evidence as relates to the errors assigned, instead of copying verbatim the testimony of numerous witnesses by questions and answers.¹¹ There is no sense in copying a judgment, execution and the like in cases where no question arises as to the form, or the particular words of them; but a short description of the paper, giving the sums, date, court, etc., is sufficient.¹² The use of a skeleton transcript is discussed in a subsequent section.¹³

Headings, indorsements, and verifications.—Where there are numerous papers in the record, it is not necessary to repeat in each case the style of the court and title of the cause, nor the indorsements upon each paper filed, nor the verifications in full. It is sufficient, when the style of the court and title of the cause is given in the first paper, to afterwards give the name of the document and at the head say, "Title of cause;" and where a paper is verified or acknowledged, and no point is made on the verification or acknowledgment, to say, "Duly verified," or "Duly acknowledged." The date of the paper, date of filing, date of service, etc., and every indorsement that may be important, should, of course, appear. The rest may, with advantage, be omitted.¹⁴

§ 316. Effect of Stipulations.—Stipulations of the parties frequently specify that the transcript is correct, or that it is sufficient. The effect of these stipulations upon the sufficiency of the transcript is discussed in this section; their effect upon its correctness being reserved for a later section.¹⁵

Where the respondent stipulates to the sufficiency of the transcript, he is bound thereby. Thus, it has been held that an objection that necessary papers are omitted is completely answered by a stipulation of counsel that the transcript contains all that is necessary for the purposes of appeal.¹⁶ Similarly, it has been held that a stipulation that "the plaintiff duly excepted" will be construed as a stipulation that the exceptions were sufficiently specified to render them available.¹⁷

Nevertheless, the fact that the respondent has stipulated to the correctness of the transcript does not preclude him from objecting to the sufficiency thereof.¹⁸ As the reason for this rule, it has been said that such a stipulation is but a substitute for the clerk's certificate to the correctness of the transcript. It simply shows that it is a transcript of such record of the proceedings as has been, in fact, made in the court below. The record itself may be sufficient or insufficient under the law to authorize the appellate court to review the action of the court below. A stipulation may, of course, do more than authenticate the transcript as a true copy of the record below, but when attorneys design to so stipulate, they should do so in terms not to be misunderstood.¹⁹

Furthermore, a party who has stipulated that the transcript is correct and that the appeal may be heard thereon may perfect the judgment-roll contained therein by adding to it omitted matters properly belonging therein.²⁰ But the parties may not stipulate that matters contained in a transcript in one case may be read in connection with an insufficient transcript in another case, where, to do so, imposes on the appellate court the labor of culling out and determining pertinent matter in one transcript to make up the deficiencies of another.¹

Form and Arrangement.

§ 317. Form in General.—The following rule of the supreme court regulates the form of the transcript:

“All transcripts of record, except in criminal cases and civil cases coming under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, shall be printed on unruled white writing paper, ten inches long by seven inches wide, with a margin on the outer edge not less than two inches wide. The printed pages, exclusive of any marginal note or reference, shall be seven inches long and three and one-half inches wide. The folios, embracing ten lines each, shall be numbered from the commencement to the end, and the numbering of the folio shall be printed on the left margin of the page. Small pica, solid, is the smallest letter and most compact mode of composition allowed.”²¹

2. Rule VII of the supreme court, subd. 1; 177 Cal. xlix, 176 Pac. ix;

The effect of a deficiency in form appears to rest largely in the discretion of the court. Thus, where the appellant fails to comply with the rules of the supreme court relating to the mode of preparing the transcript, the judgment appealed from may be affirmed;³ and where the transcript has no index, the appeal may be dismissed.⁴ Similarly, where the lines of the transcript are not folioed, the appeal may be dismissed,⁵ or it may, in the discretion of the court, be considered upon its merits.⁶ Even if a defect in form is insufficient in itself to furnish a ground for dismissal, it may be considered in connection with other grounds.⁷

§ 318. Printing and Interlineations.—A transcript prepared under the original method, unlike a transcript prepared under the alternative method,⁸ must be printed,⁹ for the code sections authorizing a typewritten transcript under the alternative method have no application to a bill of exceptions or statement settled by the trial judge.¹⁰ An early rule of the supreme court provided that the transcript should “be written in a fair, legible hand,”¹¹ but this was changed in 1864, and the requirement of a printed transcript has been in force continuously since that year.¹² It was thought, in making this change, that the printing of transcripts would greatly facilitate the examination and hasten the decisions of

causes, as well as lessen the liability of judges to overlook or misapprehend important facts, and would facilitate the preparation and references of counsel.¹³

Written interlineations in the transcript of the record, however, are not ground for dismissing the appeal,¹⁴ at least when they do not render the transcript difficult to read or understand,¹⁵ although they may be considered in connection with other grounds.¹⁶ Where the printed transcript contains numerous interlineations and writings in the margins, it seems that the court will look only to the printed transcript, certified by the clerk to be correct.¹⁷ If interlineations and alterations are to be regarded, the certificate should show that they were in the transcript when the certificate was given. Any other rule would subject a record to most dangerous alterations or mutilations.¹⁸

§ 319. Arrangement and Indexing.—The following rule of the supreme court regulates the arrangement and indexing of transcripts:

“The pleadings, proceedings, and statement shall be chronologically arranged in the transcript. Each printed transcript and also the printed parts of a typewritten record, shall be prepared with an alphabetical index, specifying the page of each paper, order, or proceeding, and stating the character of each exhibit, and the page beginning the examination, cross-examination and redirect examination, or recall of each witness. . . . For any failure to observe this rule, the court may, of its own motion, order a proper index to be supplied . . . , or, for failure of the appellant, dismiss the appeal. The clerk is di-

There is no authority, except this rule, for dismissing an appeal for confusion in the transcript.²⁰ Even under the rule, the court may, in its discretion, give counsel an opportunity to correct an error of arrangement or indexing instead of dismissing the appeal,¹ or may content itself with criticism of the transcript and review the appeal upon its merits.² Nevertheless, it has been pointed out that reasonable attention upon the part of counsel, in the first instance, to perspicuity of arrangement of the record would greatly lessen the subsequent labors, both of themselves and of the court.³ And it has been said that when the transcript does not indicate where testimony objected to may be found, it will be assumed that the objection is not of merit or importance.⁴

§ 320: Miscellaneous Matters—Indorsement on cover.—A rule of the supreme court provides:

“There shall be indorsed upon the cover of the transcript the name of the county from which the appeal is taken, and also the name of the judge whose decision is presented for review and the names and addresses of the attorneys representing the parties to the appeal.”⁵

The purpose of requiring the name of the judge is apparently to enable the appellate court to determine if the papers contained in the transcript have been properly certified.⁶

Title of cause.—It is not the practice in California to change the title of the case when it is appealed, so as to make the defendant in the court below appear as the plaintiff on appeal.⁷ Such a course, being against usage, has a tendency to produce confusion, both on appeal and in the court below.⁸ The case should therefore be entitled with the plaintiff's name first, even when the defendant is the appellant.⁹

Skeleton form.—A transcript is insufficient which contains a skeleton statement, in which material documents are not set forth, but are merely indicated by parenthetical reference, as “(here insert deed).”¹⁰ It is sufficient, however, if, in addition to so referring to the documents, it sets them forth at the end of the statement.¹¹

Incorporation of amendments.—It would be an inadmissible practice for the appellate court to select fragments from two insufficient transcripts in order to construct them into a sufficient paper.¹² The transcript should, therefore, in all cases be a single document, and amendomitting the portion referring to the names and addresses of attorneys, was stated in 144 Cal. xxxix, 79 Pac. vii.

ments to a proposed statement,¹³ or to a proposed bill of exceptions,¹⁴ should therefore be incorporated in the proper place in the draft, and should not be set forth in a separate document. It is insufficient that the amendments are proposed for insertion at sundry places designated by reference to numbers of lines and pages in the original draft, at least where there is nothing in the transcript to indicate the point of insertion.¹⁵

Certification of Correctness.

§ 321. In General.—The Code of Civil Procedure provides that the transcript “must be certified to be correct by the clerk or the attorneys.”¹⁶ In view of this section, a transcript which is not certified by the clerk or the attorneys cannot be reviewed,¹⁷ and the appeal may be dismissed on motion of the respondent.¹⁸ Nevertheless, where the respondent moves to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the transcript has not been properly authenticated, the appellant may remove the ground of the objection by filing a properly authenticated transcript at the hearing of the cause.¹⁹ Thus, it has been said that an

The same rule applies where the certificate is insufficient as to the filing of the undertaking: Shay v. Chicago Clock Co., 111 Cal. 549, 44 Pac. 237. In Ellis v. Bennett, 2 Cal. Unrep. 302, 3 Pac. 801, it is informality in the certificate of the transcript is not ground for dismissal if the appellant later produces a proper certificate.²⁰ So, also, where there is no certificate to the transcript, and nothing to show that the papers in what is called the transcript are copies of the originals on file in the court below, the court may, on motion of the appellant, grant an order directing the clerk of the lower court to attach a proper certificate; and it may later, on failure of the appellant to furnish the certificate, dismiss the appeal.¹ The want of certification cannot be cured, however, by an affidavit of the appellant averring that "the said transcript as the same is now of record is in all respects true and correct."²

§ 322. Certificate of Clerk.—No discretion is vested in the clerk or the lower court as to the certification of the transcript by the clerk. Whether the documents submitted for certification will constitute, when certified, a transcript of appeal, is a question which a clerk of a court cannot determine. It is his duty to certify to the correctness of the documents in the transcript, if they are correct copies of the originals in his custody, and transmit the same to the appellate court.³ Furthermore, after an appeal is taken, the lower court loses, and the appellate court acquires, jurisdiction. Consequently, the lower court has no power to forbid its clerk to certify to the transcript, and the appellate court may order that such a certificate be made.⁴ Indeed, the appellate court is said that certificates of the presiding judge and clerk, made after the service and filing of notice of motion to dismiss the appeal, did not supply the defects in the transcript. These defects, however, were not only want of certification, but also defective notice of appeal and want of proof of service of the transcript.

not bound by the certificate of the clerk as to the correctness of the record.⁵ On the contrary, it may, when necessary, compel him to correct his certificate and to transmit a proper record;⁶ although it seems that mandamus will not lie to compel certification.⁷ Similarly, the appellate court is not bound by the clerk's certificate that a proper undertaking has been duly filed.⁸ Under a former rule, providing that the transcript might be certified by the clerk where the parties did not agree, it was held that the clerk might certify, although the transcript had not been first submitted to the attorney for the respondent.⁹

§ 323. Certificate of Attorneys.—The code section requiring a certification of the transcript places the certificate of the attorneys upon the same plane as the certificate of the clerk.¹⁰ The object of the rule allowing attorneys to stipulate to the correctness of the transcript is to enable the attorney for the appellant, with the consent of the opposite attorney, to make up the record and omit all useless and superfluous matter.¹¹ Where the counsel for respondent has stipulated that the transcript is correct, he cannot be heard to impeach it by showing the entry of judgment at another and later date.¹² Where he has stipulated that depositions may be considered as a part of a statement on motion for new trial or on appeal, he cannot assert the strict requirement of the statute with respect to setting out these depositions in the statement.¹³

It must be remembered, however, that a stipulation that the transcript is correct is only equivalent to the certificate of the clerk, and does not deprive the party stipulating of the right to question the sufficiency of the matters included.¹⁴ Again, it is obvious that a stipulation agreeing to the transcript not signed by the counsel of all of the parties to the appeal is insufficient.¹⁵

§ 324. Sufficiency of Certificate.—Several cases have passed on the sufficiency of certificates as to the correctness of the transcript.¹⁶ Thus, it has been held that a certificate is sufficient which states that the copies of the papers included within the transcript as printed are true and correct copies of the original papers on file in the case.¹⁷ A stipulation signed by the attorneys that the papers contained in the transcript “are true and correct copies of the original papers on file in said action” is a sufficient authentication.¹⁸ Again, a certificate of the clerk that “The foregoing are full, true, and correct copies of originals on file and of record in my office, and that the foregoing constitutes the transcript on appeal from the judgment and from the order of the court denying defendant’s motion for a new trial,” has been held sufficient in point of form.¹⁹ It has been observed that it is no part of the duty of the clerk to certify that the papers contained in the transcript constitute the record on appeal, although it is the general practice and is proper for the clerk in his certificate to state that the transcript contains a copy of the judgment-roll. In the absence of such a certificate, it will be assumed that the pleadings, order, findings and judgment mentioned in the certificate are those which constitute the judgment-roll.

Authentication of Papers Used Below.

§ 325. Necessity.—Unless the appellate court requires the clerk of the trial court to certify copies of papers used below,² it is axiomatic that papers not properly authenticated as having been used in a hearing resulting in a judgment or order or decree cannot be considered on appeal.³ Where the record does not authenticate the papers used at the hearing below in the manner required by law, the appeal, if taken, whether under the old method or under the alternative method, is ineffectual.⁴ In the absence of proper authentication, the appellate courts have in some cases granted a motion to dismiss the appeal.⁵ The more appropriate order, however, is an affirmance of the order appealed from.⁶

The obvious purpose of authentication is to show upon what evidence or papers the court below made its order, and thus enable the reviewing court to determine whether, upon the record as made before it, the court below was legally authorized to make the order complained of.⁷ There is no injustice to respondents in the requirement of authentication, although it may prevent the appellate court from considering their affidavits, for in the absence of a proper record showing error, the court will conclusively presume that the order of the court below was based on affidavits sufficient to justify it.⁸

§ 326. Method Generally.—There was formerly great difficulty and confusion as to the proper mode of authenticating papers used on the hearing below.⁹ The code provides no special mode by which the papers used on the hearing below shall be identified,¹⁰ and originally, although there was no rule of the supreme court on this subject,¹¹ two methods of authentication were allowed: the first, incorporation of the papers in a bill of exceptions;¹² the second, certification by the trial judge.¹³

Adoption of rule XXIX.—Later, the court challenged the validity of this second method of authentication and declared the advisability of adopting a rule of court covering the question.¹⁴ Immediately afterward,¹⁵ and as a consequence thereof,¹⁶ the supreme court adopted the following rule:

“In all cases of appeal from the orders of the superior courts, the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporating the same in a bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law.”¹⁷

As no other mode of authentication was at first provided by law, inclusion of the papers in a bill of exceptions became the only method allowed.¹⁸

Adoption of alternative method of preparing record.—Still later, the legislature adopted the alternative method of preparing the record on appeal,¹⁹ and it is now the rule that the papers used below may be authenticated either by including them in a bill of exceptions or in the reporter's transcript.²⁰ One method or the other must be followed, however,¹ for the practice under which the judge certifies to a bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript containing the papers used at the hearing, is simple and efficacious, and cannot with safety be departed from.² Accordingly, certification by the clerk is of no effect,³ and the stipulation of the parties is sometimes regarded as insufficient.⁴

Limitations on rule.—The rule requiring the authentication of papers used below in a particular manner does not apply to papers which are themselves part of the judgment-roll.⁵ Furthermore, it applies only where appeals are taken to those orders which are appealable.⁶

§ 327. Certificate of Judge.—In the absence of a rule specifying the method of authenticating papers used at the hearing below,⁷ it was originally held that such authentication might be made by a certificate of the judge that the papers had been used by him.⁸ Later, however, the court pointed out the advisability of declaring a rule on the subject, and suggested that authentication by bill of exceptions was the only proper method⁹ and the rule requiring authentication by bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law.¹⁰ Since the adoption of this rule, it has been held, except for one case,¹¹ that certification by the judge is insufficient.¹² The certificate of the judge is not the equivalent of a bill of exceptions, for the certificate may be made ex parte.¹³

There was no decision as to when the judge must have made his certificate,¹⁴ but the supreme court suggested to members of the bar that they request the judge, at the hearing, to indorse each affidavit or other document as having been used upon the motion.¹⁵

ferred to as "a safe mode,"¹ and the court questioned whether a more simple or convenient means of presenting the case could be devised.² In order to comply with the rule requiring authentication by a bill of exceptions, parties appealing from orders may follow the same practice as is prescribed for the preparation and settlement of bills of exception generally.³

§ 329. Certificate of Clerk.—The rule is well settled that certification by the clerk is an insufficient mode of authenticating the papers used in the court below,⁴ either under the old or the alternative method of perfecting and presenting the record on appeal.⁵ If the transcript is prepared under the old method, the papers must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions.⁶ If the transcript is prepared under the alternative method, the papers may be incorporated in the reporter's transcript.⁷ If either of these methods is pursued, the record is examined and authenticated by the trial judge, the person who knows what papers were used at the hearing below.⁸ Certification by the clerk is not permissible, for it is not for the clerk to determine what papers or evidence the court acted upon.⁹ His functions are limited to certifying to the correctness of the copies of the papers constituting the transcript. As he is not authorized by law to certify to the fact that certain papers have been used, his certificate can have no greater force than that of a bystander who was present at the hearing.¹⁰ At any rate, his certificate that certain papers were used is not determinative of that fact as against his subsequent statement that he signed by mistake and without knowledge of the facts.¹¹ It is, of course, insufficient that the affidavits are marked as filed by the clerk, or that they are referred to merely by name of the affiants in an order of the court.¹²

§ 330. Stipulation of Parties.—Although it has sometimes been held that the stipulation of the parties is a sufficient authentication,¹³ at least of such matters as affidavits, minutes or orders as distinguished from oral evidence,¹⁴ it is a general rule that the stipulation of the parties does not take the place of the authentication required by law.¹⁵ As the reason for this latter view, it has been said that neither parties litigant nor counsel can confer original or appellate jurisdiction by stipulation or consent.¹⁶ Signature by the appellant's attorneys alone is obviously insufficient.¹⁷ The law permits a stipulation of the parties as to the correctness of the transcript,¹⁸ but this analogy is of doubtful value; first, because the certification of the transcript may be by the clerk,¹⁹ while authentication of papers may not;²⁰ and second, because the code section requiring certification of the transcript expressly allows certification by the attorneys,¹ while the court rule providing the method of authentication does not.²

§ 331. Sufficiency of Authentication.—If papers used below are to be considered on appeal, it must not only appear that the papers submitted in the transcript were used at the hearing below, but also that they were the only ones so used.³ Thus, it was held, under the former rule allowing certification by the judge,⁴ that a certificate was insufficient which merely stated that the papers submitted had been used at the hearing below, without certifying that they were all the papers so used.⁵

Furthermore, positive identification of the papers is required. Thus certificates of judges, at a time when they were ordinarily allowed, were held insufficient if they only identified affidavits submitted by the names of the affiants.⁶ Similarly, a bill of exceptions has been re-

Printing, Service and Filing.

§ 332. Printing Through Clerk of Appellate Court.—Where the transcript is prepared under the original method, printing is required.⁸ In complying with this requirement, however, an appellant may avail himself of the following rule of the supreme court:

“The written transcript, in civil cases, duly authenticated, together with sufficient funds to pay the expenses of printing the same, may be transmitted to the clerk of the court to which the appeal is to be taken. The clerk, upon the receipt thereof, shall file the same and cause the transcript to be printed, and to a printed copy shall annex his certificate that the said printed transcript is a full and correct copy of the transcript furnished to him by the party; and said certificate shall be prima facie evidence that the same is correct. The said printed copy shall also be filed, and constitute the record of the cause in said court, subject to be corrected by reference to the written transcript on file.”⁹

This rule is no doubt somewhat incomplete,¹⁰ and its provisions have seldom been invoked by appellants. It is to be strictly enforced and should be obeyed as written. Consequently, it is necessary that funds to pay for the printing accompany the written transcript, and an understanding between the attorney for the appellant and the clerk of the appellate court that the attorney should attend to the printing does not dispense with a compliance with this requirement.¹¹ Moreover, the general understanding is that when an appellant chooses to have his transcript printed by the clerk, he must furnish it to the clerk soon enough for the latter to have it printed and served within the forty-day period allowed for filing.¹² Certainly where the time for filing is extended in order to give the appellant an opportunity to print the transcript, he may not avail himself of this rule by filing a manuscript copy with the funds for printing within the time extended.¹³

§ 333. Service.—A rule of the supreme court provides as follows:

“Before the printed transcript is filed, a copy thereof shall be served upon the adverse party, and if there be more than one adverse party appearing by different attorneys, upon the attorney of each party so appearing.”¹⁴

In this connection the court has said that when the appellant himself has the transcript printed, there is no reason why the copies should not be served at or before the time for filing.¹⁵

Another rule provides:

“Written evidence of the service upon the adverse party of the printed transcript shall be filed therewith.”¹⁶

Where it appears that no substantially correct copy of the transcript has been served on the respondent, the appeal may be dismissed.¹⁷ Failure to serve the transcript punctually, however, is not ground for dismissal, if reasonable diligence has been used, but may occasion the postponement of the hearing if the respondent has not had ample time to prepare for the argument.¹⁸

Service when printed through clerk.—A rule of court allows an appellant to file a written transcript with funds for printing.¹⁹ Under the original statement of this rule, which did not specify the manner of service, it was said that the appellant should direct the clerk to forward to him for service the necessary copies, as soon as printed.²⁰ The present rule provides that “the clerk shall . . . transmit, by mail or express, copies to the attorneys of the adverse parties, and note such service on the original.”¹

Where an appellant avails himself of this rule, it may not always be practicable to serve before filing the printed transcript, without unduly delaying the filing.² Indeed, it has been the uniform practice, when the written transcript has been filed within the forty-day period allowed, or any extension of such period, to require only a service of a copy of the transcript after it has been printed under the direction of the clerk. The rules do not require, in such case, service of the transcript before it is printed.³

§ 334. Filing Generally.—Rules of the supreme court require the appellant, within a prescribed period,⁴ to file the transcript,⁵ and with it written evidence of its service on the adverse party.⁶ If the transcript is not filed within the prescribed time (and it should be noted that the running of this time may be postponed by several circumstances),⁷ the appeal will be dismissed,⁸ unless the default is excused.⁹ Nevertheless, the jurisdiction of the appellate court is not acquired by the filing of the transcript, and its loss or destruction, after filing; therefore does not divest the jurisdiction of the court nor prevent a determination of the appeal.¹⁰ No transcript which fails to conform to the rules of the supreme court may be filed by the clerk.¹¹ Placing the transcript in the hands of an express company in transit to the clerk of the appellate court is not the equivalent of filing, and the transcript cannot be considered as filed when so placed.¹²

§ 335. Copies Required.—The following rules of the supreme court state the requirements as to the copies of the transcript to be filed:

“The party wishing to file any printed paper shall prepare the original and twenty copies thereof. If such paper is to be filed in a district court of appeal, the original and three copies shall be filed therein, and the remaining seventeen copies shall be delivered to the clerk of the supreme court. If it be filed in the supreme court, the original must be accompanied by the twenty copies, unless it is an application to the supreme court for the hearing of a cause decided by a district court of appeal, in which case the party shall deliver to the clerk of said district court one copy for each justice of said court or the

VII. ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF PREPARING RECORD.

In General.

§ 336. Nature and Constitutionality.—Sections 953a, 953b and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, added in 1907,¹⁶ provide an alternative method of preparing the record on appeal. This method is one which the parties may take advantage of in lieu of preparing a bill of exceptions in the usual way which would include service of the original draft upon the opposing party in the action and the preparation of amendments by such opposing party and the final submission of the bill with amendments to the judge for settlement.¹⁷ These sections provide a substitute for the bill of exceptions.¹⁸ They do

The constitutionality of the legislative act which added sections 953a, 953b and 953c to the Code of Civil Procedure has been upheld as against the objection that it violates the constitutional provision that "every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title,"¹ and as against the objection that it violates due process of law in failing to provide for service of the notice filed with the clerk that the appellant intends to appeal and requiring that a transcript be made up.²

§ 337. Criticism by the Courts.—The alternative method of preparing the record on appeal has often been criticised by the courts.³ It has been said to have "disadvantages in practice,"⁴ and has been referred to as a "most unsatisfactory method,"⁵ and as "a pitfall for the unwary.”⁶ In place of facilitating the decision of cases on appeal, its tendency has been to produce delay,⁷ and it has, according to the critics, neither saved litigants any expense nor relieved the court or the attorneys of any labor.⁸ The constant lapses, on the part of the profession, from a proper observance of the rules of practice governing the prosecution of appeals under this method have, it has been said, made it a dreadful alternative indeed.⁹

The supreme court has pointed out that there should be one, and only one, method of presenting a record on appeal,¹⁰ and the district court of appeal has expressed the hope that the legislature, having in mind the idea of simplifying procedure, will furnish to the bar and the courts one method of appeal only, or repeal the statutory rules of procedure and leave these matters for regulation by rules of court.¹¹ That few attorneys bearing the reputation for painstaking care in prosecuting appeals have adopted this substitute method of presenting their records encourages the hope that if the legislature does not repeal it, attorneys generally will abandon it.¹² record on appeal, were added to the Code of Civil Procedure at the same time.¹³ It has been said that they all form part of one scheme, or rather schemes, of appeal, and are to be read together.¹⁴ Nevertheless, these two statutes are entirely independent of each other,¹⁵ for the sections relating to the alternative method of preparing the record do not purport to authorize an appeal, or prescribe how it may be taken.¹⁶ If an appeal is taken under sections 941a, 941b and 941c, the appellant may follow it up by filing a printed transcript and copies thereof, as required by the rules of the supreme court, or, at his option, by filing the typewritten transcript authorized by sections 953a, 953b and 953c. Conversely, if he takes his appeal as provided in section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by serving and filing a notice of appeal and undertaking on appeal, he may support such appeal either by a transcript prepared and filed under sections 953a, 953b and 953c, or by a transcript printed and filed as was customary previous to the enactment of those sections and as directed by the rules of the court.¹⁷ In other words, the appeal having been properly taken in compliance with either the old or the alternative method, the record may be made up in any way permitted by the code.¹⁸ In view of the fact that the alternative method of appeal is distinct from the alternative method of preparing a record on appeal, it is to be regretted that Proceedings for Preparation.

§ 339. In General.—The proceeding for a record under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure is an independent proceeding, an alternative method of preparing a record, in lieu of a bill of exceptions, to which a party may resort at his option.¹⁹ This alternative proceeding for the preparation of the record is to be distinguished from the alternative proceeding for the taking of the appeal itself.²⁰ None of the proceedings provided for the preparation of the record on appeal under the alternative method is jurisdictional to the appeal,¹ although the essential steps are jurisdictional in so far as the preparation of the record is concerned.²

The principal steps in the preparation of the record under the alternative method are stated in the following provisions of the code:

“Any person desiring to appeal . . . may . . . file with the clerk of the court from whose judgment, order or decree said appeal is taken, or to be taken, a notice stating that he desires or intends to appeal, or has appealed therefrom, and requesting that a transcript . . . be made up and prepared. . . . Upon receiving said notice, it shall be the duty of the court to require the stenographic reporter thereof to transcribe fully and completely the phonographic report of the trial. . . . Upon the same being filed, it shall be the duty of the clerk forthwith to give the attorneys appearing in said cause notice that said transcript has been filed, and that within five days after the receipt of said notice the same will be presented to the judge for approval. At the time specified in the notice of the clerk to the attorneys said transcript shall be presented to the judge for his approval, and the judge shall examine the same and see that the same is a full, true and fair transcript of the proceedings had at the trial. . . . The judge shall thereupon certify to the truth and correctness of said transcript.”³

§ 340. Notice to Clerk.—In obtaining a record by the alternative method, the appellant’s first step is to

“File with the clerk of the court from whose judgment, order or decision said appeal is taken, or to be taken, a notice stating that he desires or intends to appeal, or has appealed therefrom, and requesting that a transcript of the testimony offered or taken, evidence offered or received, and all rulings, instructions, acts, or statements of the court, also all objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which the same relate, be made up and prepared.”⁴

This notice is to be carefully distinguished from the notice of appeal.⁵ It must be filed within the time required by law.⁶ Unless it appears that the appellant has given this notice to the clerk, there is no affirmative showing that he is entitled to a reporter’s transcript of the testimony, or to a clerk’s transcript of papers on file.⁷ In the absence of the filing of this notice and request, no duty devolves upon the clerk to prepare, authenticate and send up the judgment-roll.⁸ Nevertheless, it has been held that even if the notice does not contain a request that a transcript of the proceedings be made up and prepared by the clerk, the transcript, if prepared and approved, may be considered on appeal.⁹ Consequently, where the appellant has filed in the appellate court a typewritten copy of the clerk's transcript, duly certified, the court will deny respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal because of the appellant's failure to apply for a copy of the notice of appeal and of the judgment-roll.¹⁰

Appeals from orders.—The code, after providing for the notice to the clerk, reads as follows:

“If the judgment, order or decree appealed from be not included in the judgment-roll, the party desiring to appeal shall on the filing of said notice, specify therein such of the pleadings, papers, records and files in said cause as he desires to have incorporated in the said transcript in addition to the matters hereinbefore required and the same shall be included.”¹¹

Under this provision it has been held that a notice in the form which is sufficient where the appeal is from a judgment is insufficient where the appeal is from an order which is not a part of the judgment-roll.¹²

§ 341. Relation to Notice of Appeal.—The notice to the clerk to have the reporter's and clerk's transcript prepared must be distinguished from the notice of the appeal itself,¹³ just as the proceedings under the alternative method of preparing the record on appeal are to be distinguished from the alternative method of taking an appeal,¹⁴ for there is no connection between the notice for the preparation of the transcript and the notice of appeal.¹⁵ Consequently, the fact that a notice for the preparation of the transcript has been filed will not save pletely the phonographic report of the trial. The stenographic reporter shall within twenty days after said notice has been filed with the clerk, prepare a transcript of the phonographic report of the trial including therein copies of all writings offered or received in evidence and all other matters and things required by the notice above referred to to be contained therein, and shall file the same with the clerk of said court.''⁴

While this section makes it the duty of the court to order the preparation of the record, it has been held that the omission of the court to make such order does not preclude the appellate court from considering the record, for the omission is cured by the certification by the judge.⁵

Person to prepare.—It is clear enough from the language of the section that the statement is to be prepared by the stenographer and not by the judge. The purpose is to have a literal and exact record of the proceedings. There is no provision therein for the settlement of a statement prepared by the judge from his own minutes.⁶ It is of no moment, however, whether the typewriting is done by the clerk, or by the reporter. If the papers are correctly set forth in the certified transcript presented to the judge, he should certify thereto, regardless of the identity of the person who copied them.⁷

Time for preparation.—While the code provides that the stenographic reporter shall prepare and file the transcript within twenty days after notice requesting it has been filed with the clerk,⁸ this provision is merely directory, and the failure of the reporter to file the transcript within the time allowed is not jurisdictional.⁹ Neither by statute nor rule of the appellate courts is there any provision prescribing a limit to the time within which the transcript is to be prepared,¹⁰ nor any penalty for the failure of the reporter to file the transcript within twenty days.¹¹

Availability of mandamus.—Mandamus will lie to compel the stenographer to prepare the transcript,¹² and if the appellant does not avail himself of it, but delays unnecessarily, his appeal will be dismissed.¹³

§ 343. Necessity for Reporter.—In several cases it has been said that the judge's certificate is properly affixed to the transcript only when there has been a stenographic reporter present at the trial and the stenographic reporter has prepared his transcript in accordance with the law.¹⁴ If a party to an action expects to have his record on appeal prepared under the alternative method, it has therefore been said that he must see to it that the official stenographic reporter is present at the trial, in order that a transcript of the evidence and proceedings may be furnished by the one officer whose duty it is to prepare it.¹⁵ There need never be a case where a party, by reason of the absence of the official reporter, is unable to make up a record to be used on an appeal, for the old method, providing for the preparation and settlement of bills of exception and statements on motion for a new trial, has always been available for the purpose mentioned.¹⁶

Since the amendment, however, allowing the use of the alternative method of preparing the record, even where the appeal is taken on the judgment-roll alone,¹⁷ the rule requiring a stenographic reporter has been limited in its application. It is true, of course, that as to parol evidence, and as to writings merely offered or received in evidence at a trial, as distinguished from papers, records and files in the cause, it is contemplated that there shall have been a phonographic report of the proceedings, and it may be that as to such matters there can be no record prepared under the alternative method in the absence of such a phonographic report. But if there is no such evidence to report and consequently no office for a stenographic reporter to perform, if the only matters considered on the hearing were the pleadings, papers, records and files in the cause, as is always the case on a motion heard and determined solely on affidavits and the record and files of the action, there is no possible reason why such a transcript may not consist exclusively of such papers, authenticated by the judge, in a case where the same constitute all the matters material to a proper determination of the appeal.¹⁸

§ 344. Payment of Reporter.—The code provides that at the time the notice requesting a transcript is filed with the clerk of the court,

“The appellant, or person intending to appeal, shall file an undertaking in an amount to be fixed by the clerk, with two good and sufficient sureties, by which the party giving said notice shall undertake and agree to pay the clerk the cost of preparing said transcript, or may arrange personally with the stenographic reporter for his compensation."¹⁹

Where the appellant fails to file the required undertaking or to make a personal arrangement with the reporter, the clerk is justified in disregarding the request to have the transcript prepared.²⁰ If the transcript is prepared, however, it may be considered on appeal.¹

It is clear that the stenographic reporter cannot refuse to prepare or file the transcript because his fee has not been paid.² As the reason for this rule, it has been pointed out that if the reporter could refuse to file his transcription until his fee had been paid, he could deprive the appellant of his right to object to the fees charged, or, by objecting, force the appeal to await the final result of the controversy between the reporter and the appellant. Moreover, the undertaking given the clerk is security until such time as the exact amount due the reporter can be known, and this cannot be known until the final approval of the transcript by the judge. Thereupon and thereafter the appellant becomes liable for the just fees of the reporter so determined, and upon his failure to pay them recourse may be had against him and the sureties on his undertaking filed with the clerk.³

should inaugurate proceedings therefor within the time designated in the law.⁴ If the required notice to the clerk is not filed within the time set by law, the appellant loses his right to prepare his record on appeal by this method,⁵ and the record, if so prepared, cannot be considered by the appellate court.⁶ The limitation of time declared by the code is mandatory, not directory, and a contrary construction finds no support in the decisions of the supreme court and is in no wise justified by the scheme embodied in the alternative method of appeal.⁷ The failure to file a notice requesting the preparation of the record within the time specified goes to the jurisdiction in so far as the preparation of the record is concerned.⁸ It is not jurisdictional, however, so far as the appeal itself is concerned,⁹ and consequently the appeal cannot be dismissed because the required notice was filed too late.¹⁰ Where the respondent objects to the consideration of the transcript on the ground that the required notice was not given in time, he must present his objection to the appellate court upon a bill of exceptions.¹¹

judgment, order or decree" appealed or to be appealed from.¹² On that date, an amendment adopted at the legislative session of 1915 went into effect, and a provision was added that "if a proceeding on motion for a new trial be pending," such notice might be filed "within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion, and other determination thereof."¹³ It has been said that the purpose of this amendment was to afford to the appellant an opportunity to obtain a review of an order denying a new trial on appeal from the judgment, and that the new provision should therefore be liberally construed for the purpose of enabling such a review where the proceeding was pending at the time the change in the law took effect. It was not its purpose, however, to give a party who had appealed from a judgment prior to the change in the law, and whose right to such a record had absolutely expired prior to such date, a right to a new record for the purpose of reviewing matters in no way germane to the question of the correctness of the disposition of the motion for new trial, and material only to questions involved in the appeal from the judgment as the law stood prior to the change. To construe the law otherwise would be to give it a retroactive effect not warranted by any rule of construction, for it is uniformly held that a change in the law extending the time in which a proceeding may be commenced will not be considered as operating to create a new right where the time under the old law had already expired.¹⁴

§ 347. Commencement of Period.—The Code of Civil Procedure provides that the notice to the clerk

“must be filed within ten days after notice of the entry of the judgment, order or decree, or if a proceeding on motion for new trial be pending, within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion, or of other termination thereof.”¹⁵

Pursuant to the first part of this provision, the court has held that it must be shown, before the appellant can be deprived of his right to prepare his appeal under the alternative method that he had notice of the entry of judgment.¹⁶ Whether or not the notice of the entry of judgment was in fact given is a question of fact to be determined by the judge to whom the transcript is presented for certification.¹⁷ The date of an acknowledgment of service is not conclusive as to the time when notice of the entry of judgment was served if the attorney files affidavits showing that the date was erroneous.¹⁸

Pursuant to the second part of the code provision set forth at the beginning of this section, it has been said that the ten days' time “after notice of decision” denying a motion for new trial or “other termination” of such a motion, commences to run immediately upon the failure of the trial court to pass on the motion within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of decision of the court.¹⁹ Nevertheless, it has been held that if the respondent has not given notice of the termination of a motion for new trial by reason of the passage of time following service of the entry of judgment, he cannot object to the appellant's delay in filing his notice requiring the preparation of the record.²⁰

§ 348. Sufficiency of Notice of Judgment.—Written notice of the entry of the judgment, order or decree is not required in order to start the running of the ten-day period prescribed for filing notice with the clerk requesting the preparation of the transcript.¹ Actual notice, established by satisfactory evidence of record, is sufficient.² This actual notice must be shown by facts appearing in the records, files or minutes of the court, such, for instance, as the filing by the party of a notice of appeal; or a notice of intention to move for a new trial, or an application for a stay of execution.³ Filing of a notice of appeal from a judgment or order is conclusive evidence that the appellant knew of the judgment or order and its contents at the time of filing the notice, and therefore fixes the beginning of the time to give notice to the clerk in the absence of anything to show that he had notice thereof theretofore.⁴ Furthermore, it is fair to presume that an appellant had notice of the entry of judgment at the time when he filed a written demand that a transcript of the phonographic report be made up and prepared.⁵ On the other hand, a minute entry showing that a motion for new trial was denied, does not prove that the parties had notice of the original decision.⁶

§ 349. Relief from Default.—The code provides that

It has often been held that this provision is applicable to a default in failing to present a bill of exceptions within the time required,⁸ and the supreme court has recently held it applicable to a default in failing to file the notice requesting a transcript under the alternative method within the required period of ten days.⁹ It has been held, however, in connection with the rule that written notice of the entry of the judgment, order or decree is not required to start the running of this period,¹⁰ that the fact that the attorney for the appellant misread the code requirements, and thought that written notice of the order appealed from was required to start running the time for filing his notice with the clerk, is a mistake too palpable to serve as a ground for relief.¹¹ Moreover, it has been held that an ex parte order, granting further time for the preparation of the record does not relieve a party from his default in failing to file the required notice asking for a transcript;¹² and, still more directly, that an ex parte order extending the time for notice to the clerk is invalid.¹³ Manifestly the application for relief must be made within six months after the default.¹⁴ Application for relief should ordinarily be made in the trial court, and not in the appellate court.¹⁵ Nevertheless, where default in filing notice within the required time is made under circumstances showing a good cause for relief under the decisions applying the section of the code set forth above, the supreme court will grant similar relief, whether that section be applicable to the supreme court or not.¹⁶ The fact that notice to the clerk to prepare the transcript was not filed in the time prescribed is not ground for dismissal if relief has been obtained from the trial court.¹⁷

porter,²⁰ and the certification of the clerk,¹ or the stipulation of the parties,² is insufficient. It may be observed, however, that the absence of a proper authentication by the trial judge precludes only the consideration of the particular papers not authenticated, and does not forbid an examination of the record that is properly before the appellate court.³ Where the typewritten transcript contains no certificate of the judge who presided at the trial to the truth and correctness of such transcript as containing the matters required by the code, but in lieu thereof contains a certificate to the effect that certain notices, stipulation and affidavits set forth in said transcript "are correct and were before me and considered by me in connection with other testimony" upon the various rulings of which appellant complains, it has been held that this certificate is manifestly insufficient.⁴ When the judge before whom an action was tried is dead, or has been removed from office, or resigns, the reporter's transcript may be settled and certified by his successor in office; or if he be disqualified, or if the original judge becomes disqualified, or is absent from the state, by a judge of the same or an adjoining county.⁵

the statute provides, and not the transcript on appeal which the clerk may certify, containing only the pleadings and orders constituting the judgment-roll.⁶ The clerk's certification is all that is required for the notice of appeal and the judgment-roll.⁷ It is insufficient, however, for affidavits used on a motion,⁸ for the papers and pleadings leading to an order subsequent to the judgment,⁹ or for instructions to the jury given or requested.¹⁰ Thus, it is the duty of the judge, where the appeal is from a proceeding in which there is no judgment-roll, to certify the papers which are analogous to those which would constitute a judgment-roll.¹¹ In harmony with the foregoing principles, it has been held that if the transcript is signed only by the clerk, the appellate court may only consider the matters ordinarily embraced within the judgment-roll.¹²

§ 352. Proceedings for Judge's Signature Generally.—The code provides that upon the transcript being filed with the clerk by the reporter,

“It shall be the duty of the clerk forthwith to give the attorneys appearing in said cause notice that said transcript has been filed, and that within five days after the receipt of said notice the same shall be presented to the judge for approval. At the time specified in the notice of the clerk to the attorneys said transcript shall be presented to the judge for his approval, and the judge shall examine the same and see that the same is a full, true and fair transcript of the proceedings had at the trial, the testimony offered or taken, evidence offered or received, instructions, acts or statements of the court, also all objections and exceptions of counsel and matters to which the same relate. The judge shall thereupon certify to the truth and correctness of said transcript and the same shall, when settled and allowed, be and become a portion of the judgment-roll and may be considered on appeal in lieu of the bill of exceptions now provided for by law.”¹³

Where the judge who presided at the trial is not within the county when the notice required by law is given to the attorneys informing them that the transcript is ready for presentation, the judge may appoint a day for presentation and the hearing may be continued until that time.¹⁴ Where the court has certified the reporter's transcript, its duty and authority in this regard are exhausted. Unless the appellant applies for relief from such a settlement, he is therefore not entitled to require the settlement of an additional transcript.¹⁵

him to settle a proposed bill of exceptions.¹⁷ But where the record which it is sought to require the judge to certify is not, under the circumstances, such a record as the judge is required to certify, the application for a writ of mandate will be denied.¹⁸ Consequently, the writ will be denied if the notice to the clerk was filed too late,¹⁹ if the transcript was not prepared by the shorthand reporter,²⁰ or if it contains only matter which the clerk may certify.¹

§ 353. Notice of Presentation—Amendments and Supplements.—For the protection of the respondent, the code provides for notice of presentation to the attorneys appearing in the cause.² It has been pointed out that this notice is one by the clerk of the court, and not by the parties. Consequently, it has been held that the sections of the code requiring notice to a party to be given by personal service where the attorneys have their offices in the same city do not apply. There is no provision requiring notice by the clerk to be given by personal service, and such requirement of a public official would be burdensome in a degree out of all proportion to any advantage and should not be exacted. It is enough for the clerk to give notice by mail. As to the time of notice, the requirement of the statute is simply that the time specified be within five days of the giving of the notice. If the time allowed be too short for a sufficient examination of the transcript, a request should be made to the court for further time.³

Where the official reporter prepares the transcript under the alternative method, there is no provision for amendments to be offered by the opposing party,⁴ as in the case of bills of exception.⁵ This difference is no doubt due to the fact that the transcript is prepared by the reporter, an officer of the court whose business it is, when so required, to make a record of all the evidence and proceedings.⁶ The code provides, however, that

“The respondents on said appeal may at the time said transcript is presented for settlement and allowance, require the insertion therein of such other papers, files, documents, records and proceedings of said cause as they then desire to have incorporated therein, and the said papers, files, documents, records and proceedings shall when so incorporated be deemed fully authentic for use on said appeal. The parties may by stipulation omit any matters from said record which they desire to so omit.”⁷

Contents and Form of Record.

§ 354. Matters to be Included Generally.—Section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the reporter's transcript, purports to provide a method for the preparation of a record to which a party appealing “from any judgment, order or decree of the superior court” may resort “in lieu of preparing and settling a bill of exceptions,” and under which, of course, he may bring to the appellate court anything he might properly include in a bill of exceptions.⁸ In asking for the transcript, the appellant may request that it contain of the court, also all objections or exceptions of counsel, and all matters to which the same relate.”

In preparing the transcript, the reporter shall include therein

“Copies of all writings offered or received in evidence and all other matters and things required by the notice above referred to to be therein contained.”⁹

In cases as to which there is no provision of the code requiring the making of a judgment-roll, the appellant may include in his notice to the clerk a request that the documents relating to the order appealed from and corresponding to the judgment-roll be included in the transcript to be made up and prepared by the reporter.¹⁰ Where the appeal is from a judgment by default, the appellant is not entitled to have the testimony incorporated in the transcript.¹¹

“In all cases of appeal from the orders of the superior courts, the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporating the same in a bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law.”¹²

After the adoption of this rule, and until the introduction of the alternative method of preparing the record, no other mode of authentication was provided by law except by bill of exceptions.¹³ Since that time, however, it seems that papers and evidence used on the hearing of the motion below may be authenticated either by including them in a bill of exceptions or in the papers prepared under the alternative method.¹⁴

Where the order appealed from is not included in a judgment-roll, the parties may have inserted in the transcript any of the pleadings, papers, records, and files in the cause.¹⁵ Thus it has been said that upon appeal from an order heard and determined, at least in part, upon affidavits, the transcript of the reporter's notes should consist of copies of the affidavits, the rulings of the court, and any other evidence taken at the hearing.¹⁶ The inclusion of the affidavits is essential, for the law requires that they be authenticated by the judge, rather than by the clerk.¹⁷

§ 356. Form and Arrangement Generally.—A rule of the supreme court reads in part as follows:

“Transcripts on appeal in civil cases, prepared under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure . . . must be typewritten and the paper and the backs for binding the same must not exceed ten inches in length and eight inches in width. The leaves must be bound together on the left-hand side in volumes of convenient size. . . . The papers required to be sent by the clerk . . . in civil cases under said section 953a, . . . constituting the ordinary judgment-roll, are here designated as the ‘Clerk’s Transcript,’ and the certified transcriptions of the phonographic reporter’s notes required by . . . section 953a in civil cases are here designated as the ‘Reporter’s Transcript.’ The respective papers in the Clerk’s Transcript must be placed in chronological order, and if it is bound with the Reporter’s Transcript, it must come first in order. The pages of the Clerk’s Transcript and those of the Reporter’s Transcript must be numbered separately by consecutive numbers. The lines of each page must be numbered separately and consecutively. An index of each transcript must be inserted at the beginning thereof, referring to each document and to the page beginning the examination, cross-examination, redirect, and recall of each witness.”¹⁸

The purpose of this rule is not only to secure records of a uniform size for the filing cases in the clerk’s office, but the presentation of transcripts in orderly and convenient form, properly paged and indexed, for examination by the court in determining the questions involved in the appeal. Of course, it is not sufficient that the transcript presented comply with the rule in form and size only.¹⁹ Nevertheless, if the transcript is upon paper within the maximum size allowed by the rule, and if the contested points are few and simple, failure to arrange the pleadings, proceedings and transcript in chronological order may cause no such inconvenience as would warrant the dismissal of the appeal.²⁰

§ 357. Printing of Record.—Where the appellant prepares his record under the alternative method, printed copies are not required,¹ and a typewritten copy is sufficient.² The code provides that where the record on appeal is prepared under the alternative method, “such record shall be filed with the clerk of the court to which the appeal is taken and no transcript thereof need be printed,”³ and a rule of the supreme court provides that transcripts so prepared “must be typewritten.”⁴ It has been observed, however, that the language of the code provision just quoted is permissive, and that it is desirable that a printed and duly authenticated copy of the transcript be filed in the appellate court in lieu of the original transcript of the reporter’s notes.⁵ Moreover, the parts of the typewritten transcript which the appellate court is to consider should be printed in the briefs.⁶

Printing of judgment-roll.—In cases where a reporter’s transcript is prepared, the whole record on appeal, including the judgment-roll, may be typewritten. This is the practice since the amendment of 1915.⁷ In cases where no reporter's transcript is prepared, that is, where the appeal is taken on the judgment-roll, the alternative method of preparing a record on appeal did not apply until 1915, and there was therefore no statutory exemption from the necessity of printing the transcript.⁸ In 1915 a code amendment was adopted, providing that the alternative method of preparing the record should be available not only as a substitute for a bill of exceptions, but also "for the purpose of presenting a record on appeal from any appealable judgment or order, or for the purpose of having reviewed any matter or order reviewable on appeal from final judgment."⁹ The effect of this amendment is to authorize a record under the new method even where the appeal is on the judgment-roll alone, and consequently to authorize the use of a typewritten copy thereof.¹⁰

§ 358. Use of Copies.—A rule of the supreme court, after providing that parties filing printed copies of papers in the appellate court shall file an original and twenty copies thereof, and that parties filing typewritten copies shall file the original, which must not be a carbon copy, and three copies thereof, provides as follows:

"In civil cases appealed under the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, . . . the record upon appeal shall be prepared and transmitted to the court to which the appeal is taken, in accordance with said sections; and no further copies of such record shall be required."¹¹

With reference to the judgment-roll and the notice of appeal, the main effect of the alternative method of preparing a record seems to be to permit the use of typewritten, instead of printed, copies.¹² The originals of papers of this class should remain on file in the office of the clerk of the superior court, and not be sent up to the reviewing court.¹³ While the statute is open to the construction that the original of the transcript may be sent up to the appellate court, it was clearly not intended to authorize the clerk of the trial court to send up his original files in the action, consisting of the pleadings, findings, judgment and other papers made a part of the judgment-roll. To do this would not only deprive the office of the papers and records which the law makes it the duty of the clerk of the superior court to preserve, but would render him unable to enter up the remittitur of the appellate court.¹⁴

With reference to the transcript of testimony, etc., prepared in lieu of a bill of exceptions, other considerations apply. The statute evidently contemplates that the original, rather than a copy, of such transcript, shall be transmitted to the court in which the appeal is to be heard.¹⁵ It may be observed, however, that the original transcript of the reporter's notes as approved by the judge need not be sent up, for a printed and certified copy will be noticed by the appellate court.¹⁶

Printing Portions of Record in Brief.

§ 359. In General.—The Code of Civil Procedure, after providing that where the record is prepared under the alternative method, “no transcript thereof need be printed,”¹⁷ declares as follows:

“In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court.”¹⁸

The purpose of this statute is not only for the benefit of the appellate court, but also for the benefit of the respondent. The typewritten transcript under the alternative method is filed in the appellate court, and it is a very reasonable requirement that the respondent when served with the appellant's brief should have before him as a part of that brief a showing of the precise matters in printed form to which he is called upon to reply.¹⁹ Under this statute it is the duty of the appellant to print in his opening brief such portion of the record as he desires to call to the attention of the appellate court, and it is not proper procedure to omit to do so and discuss the evidence in the reply brief.²⁰ If the appellant fails to present a record which would justify a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from, respondent is not called upon to supplement it by additions thereto, but may stand upon the record so presented.¹ Accordingly, if the appellant prints in his brief portions of the transcript and the respondent files no brief and raises no question as to the correctness or sufficiency of the record as presented by the appellant, the appellate court will accept the portion set out in the appellant's brief as correct and true.³ The appellant is not only required to print the material portions of the record in his brief, but is required in such cases to index his brief in the same manner as a printed transcript.³

§ 360. Examination of Typewritten Transcript.—In harmony with the statutory rule that parties who have prepared their record under the alternative method must print in their briefs, or in supplements thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court,⁴ is the judicial rule, affirmed by the cases, again and again, that the appellate court is not required to look at the typewritten transcript for matters which are not set forth in the briefs or in supplements thereto.⁵

While the alternative method of preparing the record on appeal permits parties to file typewritten transcripts in lieu of printed judgment-rolls and bills of exception,⁶ it is impossible to lay down any rule as to just exactly what must be printed in the brief for review under that method.⁷ The appellate court is not required to assume the vexatious burden of searching the typewritten transcript for error,⁸ and the legislature did not intend that it should do so.⁹ In a word, the appellant should print enough to disclose the points made, and relied on by him.¹⁰

lant had, by his brief, presented all portions of the record, which he desired to call to its attention.¹⁵ Indeed, it has been said that this is the only order which could properly have been made,¹⁶ and that for the court to have departed from its rule of conduct and examined the transcript for matters not printed in the briefs would have been in effect to have repealed the code provision requiring such printing.¹⁷ It is worthy of note that except for a single case, in which the court acted “without assuming to establish any precedent thereby,”¹⁸ it does not appear that any judgments or orders were reversed due to the voluntary action of the appellate court in examining the typewritten transcript.¹⁹ The omission to print the record in the brief was not a ground for dismissal of the appeal, for the courts recognized that counsel for appellant and respondent might enter into an understanding designed to obviate the necessity of printing.²⁰ incompetency,"² amended the code section requiring the printing of portions of the record in the brief, by adding the following provision:

"No appeal shall be dismissed nor shall any appeal be decided adversely to any party for failure to print in his brief the portion of the record or any part thereof in support of his points, but in such case the court hearing the appeal shall direct such party to print and serve on the adverse party and file with it a supplement to his brief in which shall be set forth in full that portion of the record relied on by such party and not printed in any former brief. The court shall fix the time within which such supplement shall be served and filed and shall permit or require such additional portions of the record to be printed, served and filed as may be desirable for the full presentation of the points at issue."³

This amendment has been severely criticised.⁴ It has been said that it makes the appellate court an adjunct of the law school, requiring it to say to a party, "You have failed to read or observe an unmistakably plain provision of the statute; therefore we will allow you time in which to do this";⁵ that it is well calculated to relieve the attorney for the appellant of responsibility to his client, thus encouraging indolence and negligence.⁶ It must be observed, however, that it does not relieve the parties from the necessity of printing in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, when the appeal is taken under the alternative method of preparing the record.⁷

§ 363. Effect of Failure Since 1919.—Since the adoption of the amendment of 1919,⁸ the law has been clear and explicit as to the action to be taken by the court when a party fails to comply with the requirement that he print portions of the record in his brief.⁹ The court may not now dismiss the appeal for this cause,¹⁰ or determine it adversely.¹¹ Its power is restricted to a continuance of the hearing of the appeal,¹² and to the issuance of directions for the printing of supplements to the brief.¹³ The court may find it preferable, however, to examine the typewritten record, rather than to require that a supplement be prepared.¹⁴ In this connection it may be noted that there are no legislative directions as to the course to pursue when there has been an ostensible, but inadequate, effort to supply relevant parts of the record, and the court may, therefore, find it necessary to make an independent research through the transcript.¹⁵ It has been pointed out that counsel for a respondent may prevent delay in the hearing of an appeal by at once, upon the service of a defective brief, applying to the court for an order directing appellant to serve and file a supplemental record, as required by the amended section, and, upon an order extending his time therefor, postpone the filing of his brief until a proper record is presented.¹⁶

On a motion to require the appellant to print and serve a supplement to his brief, setting forth additional evidence, the court will not examine all the evidence to determine whether any material evidence has been omitted where the moving party fails to point out the evidence which he claims is material and has been omitted.¹⁷

§ 364. Sufficiency in General.—It may safely be laid down as a rule of practice clearly intended by the legislature to be observed in the preparation of appeals under the alternative system that whatever may be necessary—whether the evidence or the pleadings, the findings, conclusions of law and judgment or such interlocutory motions and orders as may have been made during the pendency of the litigation and during the trial—to a clear explanation of the points relied upon or to a lucid exposure of the relevancy, pertinency, force or importance of such points in their hearing upon the ultimate issue submitted for decision, should be inserted, in printed form, in a supplement appended to the brief.¹⁸ In other words, it seems that the legislature, in providing the so-called “alternative method” of preparing the record on appeal, contemplated that the parties should print in their briefs or in a supplement thereto so much of the record as under the old method would have been embodied in a bill of exceptions.¹⁹ It is insufficient merely to indicate in the brief the portions of the record relied on by simply citing the page of the transcription where such portion may be found.²⁰ The legislature did not intend, however, that the appellant should be required to print in his brief all the testimony appearing in the record, or even all the testimony relating to the points urged by him for reversal.¹ Obviously, a party is required to print in his brief the portions of the record in support of his points and is not required to print portions of the record that are immaterial and have no bearing on the questions presented.² However, the court may, by piecing together a scrap of the record printed in one brief with scraps found in other briefs, find enough material for a decision on the merits.³

§ 365. Sufficiency in Particular Cases.—As we have seen in the preceding section, the law requires that enough of the record be printed in the briefs to illustrate the points made and to enable the court to determine those points. Just exactly what must be printed in any particular case in order to comply with this requirement necessarily depends upon the circumstances of the case.⁴ Where it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings, it is insufficient to print in the brief merely five pages of testimony out of one hundred and fifty in the reporter's transcript.⁵ Where the appeal from a judgment for breach of a written contract is taken on the ground that the complaint fails to allege nonperformance of any act required, fragmentary references to a single disconnected clause of the contract is insufficient.⁶ Where the appeal is from an action to set aside a decree in a previous action for the foreclosure of a mortgage, the brief is insufficient if it does not print the pleadings or findings in the foreclosure case.⁷ It is not a compliance with the procedure governing appeals under the so-called alternative method for an appellant to print in his opening brief, or in the supplement thereto, only the testimony in the case favorable to his contentions. All the evidence, material to the point made on the appeal, should be presented in order that the court may consider its weight and sufficiency, and any conflict presented therein.⁸

VIII. TIME FOR FILING TRANSCRIPT.

Period Allowed.

§ 366. In General.—The time within which the transcript must be filed is regulated by a rule of the supreme court.⁹ This rule reads in part as follows:

“The appellant in a civil action shall, within forty days after an appeal is perfected, except as hereinafter stated, serve and file the printed transcript of the record, duly certified to be correct by the attorneys of the respective parties, or by the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken.”¹⁰

This states the general rule, but the time within which a transcript may be filed does not in all cases commence to run from the date of perfecting the appeal.¹¹ Thus it is

The running of the forty-day period is not postponed, however, by the pendency of a previous motion to dismiss the appeal;¹⁶ nor by the pendency of a motion by the appellant to vacate and modify the judgment under sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure;¹⁷ nor by the practice of taking several appeals in a single transcript;¹⁸ nor by the rule of the supreme court providing that if the attorney for the respondent refuses to certify the transcript within five days, the costs of procuring a certificate from the clerk shall be assessed against him.¹⁹

§ 367. Proceedings for Bill of Exceptions.—The rule of the supreme court which requires the filing of the transcript within forty days after an appeal is perfected contains this further provision:

pending or may still be instituted, the time aforesaid shall not begin to run until the settled and authenticated bill of exceptions has been filed, or the time in which a proceeding for such a bill of exceptions may be instituted has expired, or such proceeding if instituted has been dismissed by the trial court.''²⁰

This rule is framed for the purpose of affording the appellant a reasonable time within which to prepare and file the record upon which his appeal is to be heard, and should be construed as giving him the whole of this time to prepare that record after it is ready for preparation.¹ The rule assumes that it will sometimes happen (in fact, it generally happens) that a bill of exceptions which may be used in support of a particular appeal will remain unsettled for some time after the appeal is perfected, and its unmistakable intent is, that in such cases the time allowed for filing the transcript shall not begin to run until the bill is settled or until the proceeding to obtain a settlement is abandoned or dismissed, or in some way definitely disposed of.² Under this rule, if the time within which the bill of exceptions may be proposed or settled has not expired, or if proceedings for its settlement are still pending before the judge and undetermined by him,³ or if forty days have not elapsed after its settlement,⁴ the appellant cannot be said to be in default because his transcript has not been filed.

hold that if there be a bill of exceptions which may be used in support of the appeal, the forty days allowed by the rule for filing the transcript does not commence to run until such bill is settled.⁶ Accordingly, an appellant is entitled to forty days after the settlement of a bill of exceptions in which to file a transcript.⁷ A refusal of the judge to settle a bill of exceptions ordinarily starts the period running the same as a settlement,⁸ but it seems that if the appellant has been endeavoring in good faith to perfect his appeal, and has obtained a writ of mandate directing the judge to settle the bill, he may still file his transcript.⁹ The fact that proceedings for the settlement of the bill have been delayed is immaterial if the right to a settlement has not been absolutely lost.¹⁰

Of course, where there is no proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions pending within forty days after the perfecting of the appeal, the rule under discussion does not apply.¹¹ Neither does it apply if there is no proceeding for a bill which is applicable to the matter appealed from, even if there is a proceeding for a bill on an order subsequent thereto.¹²

running of the forty-day period for filing the transcript,¹³ the bill of exceptions referred to is that which is applicable to the matter appealed from,¹⁴ for the practice of filing a single transcript for several appeals does not obviate the necessity of complying with the rule that the transcript must be filed within the time limited by law.¹⁵ Consequently, it is the rule that the pendency of proceedings to settle a bill of exceptions to an order after judgment does not affect the time for filing the transcript on an appeal from the judgment itself.¹⁶ Thus it has been held that the time to file a transcript on an appeal from a judgment is not postponed by reason of the pendency of proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions taken on an order relating to a writ of assistance,¹⁷ or on an order disposing of a motion to vacate the judgment,¹⁸ or on an order denying a motion for change of place of trial.¹⁹ Furthermore, where the appeal as to certain respondents is taken on the judgment-roll, the time for filing the transcript as to them is not extended by reason of the fact that the appellant is preparing a bill of exceptions to support an appeal against other respondents.²⁰ Under the former practice, allowing appeals from orders denying new trials, the fact that a bill of exceptions used on a motion for a new trial might have been used on an appeal from the judgment if settled and filed in time, did not extend the time for perfecting the appeal from the judgment beyond forty days after the settlement of the bill pertaining to such judgment. Nevertheless, to obviate the necessity of printing two transcripts, the supreme court often extended the time for filing the transcript on an appeal from the judgment.¹

§ 370. Delay or Failure in Settlement.—Delay in settling a bill of exceptions does not prevent the tolling of the period for filing the transcript,² provided the proceeding for settlement is still pending.³ In this connection it has been pointed out that the effect of laches in procuring a settlement is ordinarily for the trial court to determine,⁴ and that the trial court, upon application made in proper time, may relieve a party from the effects of his failure to serve a proposed bill within the prescribed time.⁵ Accordingly, even where fifteen months is spent in obtaining a bill of exceptions, the time for filing the transcript will not expire if this delay is not unreasonable.⁶ Certainly delay in having a bill settled is immaterial if it is not occasioned by the negligence of the appellant's counsel.⁷

Nevertheless, it has been pointed out that the ruling providing for an extension of the time for filing a transcript by reason of the pendency of proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions contemplates a proceeding for a settlement that is alive, at least to the extent that it is being in some degree pressed by the appellant, and it has therefore been held that the time is not extended if the right to have a bill settled has unquestionably been lost by appellant's delay.⁸ If the appellant, therefore, has taken no action for a period of more than six months after the service of the proposed amendments of the respondent, there is no proceeding pending for the settlement of the bill.⁹ A neglect upon the part of the appellant for forty days to take steps to secure a settlement is of course equivalent to his failure to file the transcript within the time limited.¹⁰

If proceedings for a bill of exceptions are pending, the running of the period is postponed regardless of the ultimate success or failure of the proceeding.¹¹ Consequently, if a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions is still pending in the trial court, the appellate court, in considering a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the transcript in time, will not ordinarily inquire as to whether the proceeding can ultimately avail and the bill be legally settled.¹²

§ 371. Proceedings for Reporter's Transcript.—The general rule requiring that the transcript be filed within forty days after the perfection of the appeal was made prior to the enactment of the code section providing for the alternative method of preparing the record,¹³ and was at first held inapplicable to the filing of a transcript which did not need to be printed.¹⁴ Subsequently, however, the rule was modified by the addition of the following provision:

“If the transcript for use on appeal is prepared under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure and a notice is filed by the appellant requesting a transcript under said section, the time for filing the transcript of the record on appeal shall not begin to run until such transcript is approved and certified as required by law, or until the proceeding to obtain the same has been terminated in the court below by dismissal or otherwise.”¹⁵

Under one alternative of this rule, the date of the certification of the transcript by the judge or the clerk, as the case may be, marks the time of the completion of the preparation of the transcript and must, therefore, be regarded as the date from which the time within which the transcript must be filed in the appellate court begins to run.¹⁶ It has been observed that there seems to be no limit of time provided by the rule within which the transcript must be prepared.¹⁷

Under the other alternative of this rule, it is the dismissal by the lower court which starts the time running. In this connection it has been held that an appeal from the order of dismissal does not ipso facto operate to prevent the running of the time, although it has been suggested that in a case involving a gross abuse of discretion, the appellate court would excuse the failure to file the transcript pending a diligent prosecution of the appeal from the order of dismissal.¹⁸

§ 372. Pendency of Motion for New Trial.—The rule requiring that the transcript be filed within forty days after the perfection of the appeal formerly provided that if the appellant had given notice of a motion for a new trial, the time for filing the transcript should not begin to run until the motion for a new trial had been decided or the proceeding dismissed for want of prosecution.¹⁹ This provision took effect February 18, 1905, and was held applicable to a case in which the proceeding to dismiss the appeal was made after that date.²⁰ Its purpose was to give the appellant an opportunity, if he so desired, to present his appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial upon the same transcript. To give effect to this purpose it was necessary to construe it as meaning that the time for filing the transcript did not begin to run until the order denying or dismissing the motion for a new trial had not only been made, but had also been either entered on the minutes of the superior court or filed with the clerk thereof, so as to give an immediate right of appeal therefrom. But notice of the entry of the order denying motion for new trial, or the perfecting of an appeal from such order, was not necessary.¹

An order dismissing a motion for a new trial on the ground that it was not prosecuted with due diligence was in effect one denying the motion, and started the running of the period;² but an order granting a new trial provided

Assuming, without deciding, that this proviso was applicable where an appellant first perfected his appeal and then gave notice of motion for new trial, the court said that it was clearly inapplicable if more than forty days had elapsed since the motion was denied and if no transcript had been filed.⁴ Furthermore, where a motion for new trial did not lie, as in proceedings to set apart a probate homestead, the time for filing the transcript was not extended by an attempt to take such proceedings.⁵

§ 373. Extension by Stipulation.—The rules of the supreme court provide that the time limited for filing the transcript “may be extended by written stipulation or by order, based on affidavit, showing good cause therefor.”⁶

The fact that the transcript was filed agreeably to stipulation is a sufficient answer to a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no transcript has been filed in time.⁷ Furthermore, it has been held that a stipulation extending the time for filing the transcript, like an order of the court for the same purpose,⁸ may be given effect although not filed with the clerk.⁹ Where a substituted

§ 374. Extension by Order.—Pursuant to the rule previously set forth,¹³ the courts have often recognized the right to extend the time for filing the transcript by court order.¹⁴ Indeed, it is the practice to be liberal in extending the time for filing transcripts where no delay in the hearing of the case can result.¹⁵ Thus, where an appeal is taken from a judgment and also from an order rendered after judgment, the court, to obviate the necessity of preparing two transcripts, has often extended the time for filing the transcript on the appeal from the judgment.¹⁶ Similarly, where the appellant appeals and also asks for mandamus, the court has allowed forty days after the determination of the application for mandamus in which to file the transcript on appeal.¹⁷ The supreme court, however, has expressed its unqualified disapproval of the growing habit of attorneys in asking for extensions on the ground that the printer has failed to print the transcript in time.¹⁸ An extension of time to file a transcript, granted by four associate justices, is equivalent to an extension of time for the same purpose by the court,¹⁹ and may be given effect although not filed with the clerk.²⁰ Under a present rule of court, the chief justice of the supreme court and the presiding justices of the district courts of appeal are authorized to extend the time for filing records.¹ An order extending the time to file a transcript cannot be attacked on motion to dismiss the appeal.²

other appeal,⁹ being, in effect, an affirmance of the judgment.¹⁰ Under a provision of a former rule providing that an appeal dismissed for failure to file the transcript might be restored on good cause shown,¹¹ the court required affidavits showing that the appeal had been taken in good faith and that, in the opinion of counsel at least, there were substantial errors in the record which ought to be corrected by the appellate court.¹²

§ 376. Certificate of Clerk Generally.—A rule of the supreme court provides as follows:

“On motion to dismiss an appeal for a failure to file the transcript within the prescribed time, there shall be presented the certificate of the clerk of the court below, certifying the nature of the action and the relief demanded by the complaint, the amount or character of the judgment or order appealed from, the fact and date of the settlement and filing of the bill of exceptions or the settlement of the transcript prepared under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, if any, and the fact and date of the dismissal, if any, by the trial court of any proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or transcript.”¹³

§ 377. Sufficiency of Certificate.—The rule of the supreme court which prescribes the clerk's certificate supporting a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the transcript in time has recently been changed in view of the present method of preparing the record,¹⁹ and cases passing upon the sufficiency of certificates must be read with this in view. The supreme court, in an early case, observed that many of the certificates presented were radically defective, and set forth a convenient and accurate form, sufficient both in form and substance, which could be varied to suit different states of facts.²⁰ Where there is only one appeal taken, and only one court to which it could be taken, it has been held that the certificate need not show what judgment or order the appellant has appealed from, nor to what court he has appealed.¹ judgment,² or the order or judgment appealed from,³ or the names of the attorneys for the respective parties.⁴ Under the former practice, a certificate was also defective if it did not state either the fact or the date of the service of the notice of appeal,⁵ or the character of the evidence of the service,⁶ or that an undertaking on appeal is in due form,⁷ or that a statement on appeal had been settled,⁸ or that such a statement had been filed.⁹

§ 378. Evidence and Proof on Hearing.—By a rule of the supreme court,¹⁰ a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that the transcript is not filed within the time prescribed is to be heard upon the certificate of the trial court.¹¹ It is contemplated by this rule that the matters therein mentioned should be stated in the certificate of the clerk, and not that they should be presented by documents on file in the court below,¹² or by affidavits.¹³ Consequently, a statement in the undertaking on file as to the amount and character of the judgment cannot supply an omission in this respect in the certificate;¹⁴ and an omission to state the fact and date of service of the notice of appeal cannot be supplied by an affidavit of service.¹⁵ Moreover, affidavits for the respondent cannot be considered for the purpose of showing the character of the records kept by the clerk, and from what order the appeal was taken.¹⁶ There is no reason, however, why the appellate court should not consider an amended certificate, if material; but a respondent's request to file an additional certificate is not an abandonment of his right to have his motion determined on his original certificate.¹⁷

Burden of proof.—Upon a motion to dismiss an appeal for failure to file the transcript in time, it was formerly the rule that the respondent was only required to show in the first instance that more than forty days had expired since the perfecting of the appeal, and in the absence of any further showing on the part of the appellant, the appeal would be dismissed. If the appellant desired to avail himself of an exception to the rule that the filing must take place within forty days from the perfection of the appeal, the burden was upon him to show that he is within the exception, as by showing the pendency of proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions.¹⁸ Now, however, the court rule relating to the certificate of the clerk provides as follows:

“It shall be incumbent on the party moving to dismiss to show by such certificate or by affidavit that no proceeding for a bill of exceptions or transcript under section 953a is pending in the trial court, and if no such proceeding was ever instituted, that the time to institute the same has expired.”¹⁹

tion of the appeal,²⁰ and if there are no circumstances postponing the running of the period,¹ no stipulation or order extending the time allowed,² and no filing before notice has been given of the motion to dismiss the appeal,³ the appellate court may excuse the delay and allow the filing if the appellant has been free from inexcusable neglect.⁴ In this connection it has been observed that rules of court are but a means to accomplish the ends of justice, and may be suspended in a particular case if the ends of justice require it.⁵ More specifically, the court has said that good cause for failure to comply with the rule in regard to the filing of the transcript on appeal is always a sufficient answer to a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground of such failure.⁶ Indeed, the enforcement of the rule as to the time for filing a transcript is within the discretion of the appellate court, and the appellant will not be denied a hearing of his appeal on its merits if his default has not occasioned a material delay nor put the respondent to costs or inconveniences.⁷ Leave given to file a transcript, however, is not equivalent to an extension of the prescribed time if the period of possible extension has expired. Neither is it an adjudication of the respondent's right to a dismissal if leave is granted subject to a pending motion of dismissal.⁸ Of course, there will be no relief from the default if there is no showing that a record on appeal is in course of preparation and no excuse is offered for the appellant's failure to prepare it.⁹

§ 380. Circumstances Justifying Relief.—In applying the rule that a transcript may be filed after the time prescribed by law if there has been no inexcusable delay,¹⁰ the California courts have considered various excuses. They have held delay in filing the transcript excusable where the appellate court, as constituted during the period limited, was incompetent to hear the appeal;¹¹ where the attorney for the appellant was called to a distant state on account of the illness of his mother;¹² where the appeal was taken during the illness of the attorney for the appellant and against his directions;¹³ where the attorney for the appellants erroneously thought that the appeal was to be carried no further;¹⁴ and where the appellant, a married woman suing for divorce, was seeking to obtain an order requiring the respondent, her husband, to pay the expense of printing the transcript.¹⁵ So, also, the court has excused a very slight delay where the appellant, attempting to file the transcript, found the office of the clerk closed and left the copies with the clerk of another

court to be delivered to the proper office.¹⁶ Indeed, in view of the absence of decisions construing the rule allowing the filing of a written transcript with funds to pay for the printing thereof, the court in one case excused default in filing the printed transcript where the clerk accepted a written transcript upon assurances that a printed transcript would later be furnished.¹⁷

The courts have held, however, that delay in filing the transcript is not excused by the fact that the appellant was ill;¹⁸ that there was an attempt to compromise;¹⁹ that the attorney for the appellant failed to observe a settled rule of law;²⁰ that the attorney for the appellant through inadvertence or neglect overlooked the time for filing;¹ or that the attorney depended upon the clerk of the lower court to prepare and file the transcript for him.²

IX. MATTERS SUBSEQUENT TO FILING.

Defects and Objections.

§ 381. Effect of Defects.—In general, it may be said that where the transcript which is submitted fails to comply with the rules of court, no error appears on the face of the record, and the appellate court must assume that the judgment or order rendered below was justified.³ In such case, therefore, the judgment rendered below may be affirmed,⁴ or the appeal may be dismissed.⁵ This dismissal is sometimes made contingent upon the failure of the appellant to correct the defect.⁶ It has been said that where the omissions of the transcript are such as to show beyond all question that an examination of the case upon its merits would be useless, the appeal will be dismissed,⁷ but the more recent view seems to be that in such cases, if the appellate court has acquired jurisdiction, the proper order is one of affirmance for lack of record showing error.⁸ Ordinarily, however, it can matter little whether the form of the order be one of dismissal or one of affirmance.⁹ There is an essential difference between a case in which the appellant has failed to take the proper steps for bringing his appeal before the court, and a case in which the appellant has, or is supposed to have, failed to make a record which, on being looked into, will disclose error in the judgment or order appealed from.¹⁰

Particular defects.—The effect of particular defects is noticed in this article at the various places where these defects are discussed. In connection with the rules as to what matters are required in the record, attention has been given to the effect of particular omissions, such as the omission of a showing of the jurisdiction of the court,¹¹ of the objections of the appellant,¹² of his exceptions,¹³ of the grounds of a motion for a new trial,¹⁴ of the giving of notice of appeal,¹⁵ of the filing of an undertaking,¹⁶ and of other record except the judgment-roll.¹⁷ In connection with the preparation of the record by the original method, attention has been given to the effect of a failure to present the transcript in the required form,¹⁸ a failure to certify or stipulate to the correctness of the transcript,¹⁹ a failure to authenticate the papers used on the hearing below,²⁰ and a failure to serve the transcript on the adverse party.¹ In connection with the preparation of the record by the alternative method, notice has been given to the effect of a failure to notify the clerk to prepare the transcript as required by law,² various failures attending the preparation of the reporter's transcript,³ insufficient certification of the record,⁴ a failure to conform to the rules as to form and arrangement,⁵ and a failure to print portions of the reporter's transcript in the briefs.⁶ Attention has already been given to the effect of a failure to file the transcript in time,⁷ and will later be given to the effect of a failure to assign errors.⁸

§ 382. Time for Raising Objection.—A rule of the supreme court reads as follows:

“Exceptions or objections to the transcript, statement, the notice of appeal, or any technical exception or objection to the record in civil cases, affecting the right of the appellant to be heard on the points of error assigned, which might be cured on suggestion of diminution of the record, must be taken and notified to the appellant, in writing, at least five days before the hearing, or they will not be regarded; and when so noted it shall be the duty of the appellant to present and file at the hearing of the cause such additional record, certificate, or other matter, if such there be, to remove or answer the objection or exception so taken; otherwise such objection or exception, if well taken, shall prevail.”⁹

The object of this rule is to enable the appellant to remedy any defect or omission of the transcript for the purpose of enabling him to present his appeal upon the merits, and is to be liberally construed for that purpose.¹⁰ If the respondent does not take his objection in time, it will not be noticed,¹¹ and will be deemed to have been waived.¹² If he does take his objection in time, the appellant may remove its grounds by correcting the defect.¹³ If he does not do so, he must take the risk of having his appeal dismissed.¹⁴

The rule under discussion does not apply to an objection based on an omission which cannot be remedied by the appellant,¹⁵ nor to an objection which goes directly to the appellate court's objection to hear the appeal.¹⁶ Even where the rule applies, a formal notice of objection is unnecessary, and the objection may therefore be made in the respondent's brief if this is done within the time required by the rule.¹⁷

9. Rule XV of the supreme court: 177 Cal. xliii, 176 Pac. vii. Except for changes in terms due to varying rules as to what constitutes the record, this same principle appears as rule XV in 160 Cal. xli, 119 Pac. ix; 144 Cal. xxxix, 79 Pac. vii; 130 Cal. xxxv, 64 Pac. vii; and as rule XIII in 64 Cal. 635, and 52 Cal. 677. At one time the rule required the objection to be made in the respondent's brief: Rule XIII, 41 Cal. 695; 37 Cal. 705; and at another time at the first term after the transcript was filed and at least one day before the argument: Rule XIII, 28 Cal. 686; 26 Cal. 693; 11 Cal. 408.

§ 383. Waiver of Objection.—If the respondent does not raise an objection to the record, within the time required by the rule of court previously quoted,¹⁸ he will be deemed to have waived it.¹⁹ In this way respondents have been held to have waived objections based on the failure of the appellant to authenticate the affidavits used below,²⁰ to show when the original proposed statement was filed,¹ and to number the folios of the transcript.² So, also, it has been held that an objection that the transcript does not contain the whole record should be made before the submission of the cause,³ so that the appellant may have an opportunity of supplying the missing papers,⁴ or it will not be noticed.⁵

There is no waiver, however, of an objection based on an omission which cannot be remedied by the appellant, such as the failure to prepare a statement in the court below;⁶ nor of an objection which goes directly to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, such as the failure to serve the notice of appeal.⁷ So, also, an objection that the transcript does not bring up enough of the record to show error is not a mere technical objection to the transcript and is not waived by failing to take an exception thereto.⁸

§ 384. Removal of Ground of Objection.—The purpose of the court rule requiring the respondent to object to the record at least five days before the hearing is to enable the appellant to remedy the defects or omissions of the transcript, so that he may present his appeal upon its merits.⁹ Accordingly, the ground of such an objection is removed if the appellant files a proper record before the hearing.¹⁰ It is true that the code provides that “if the appellant fails to furnish the necessary papers, the appeal may be dismissed,”¹¹ but this is to be read in connection with court rules allowing the correction of defects and providing for seasonable objection thereto.¹² So construed, this does not authorize a dismissal upon the mere showing that the transcript as filed is defective, but merely authorizes a dismissal if the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers after the diminution of the record has been suggested.¹³

The rule that the appellant, by correcting the record before the hearing, may remove the ground of the respondent's objection, has been applied where the transcript before correction did not contain a copy of the judgment-roll,¹⁴ a copy of the notice of appeal,¹⁵ a showing of service thereof,¹⁶ a copy of the undertaking on appeal,¹⁷

Amendments and Corrections.

§ 385. Diminution of Record Generally.—A rule of the supreme court provides as follows:

“For the purpose of correcting any error or defect in the transcript, either party may suggest the same in writing, and upon notice and good cause shown, obtain such order as may be proper.”³

In connection with this rule, it must be remembered that it is the court below,⁴ and not the appellate court,⁵ which has authority to amend the record itself, although the appellate court may correct the transcript in order to

of the supreme court, and not on rule XV. It is answered by the filing of the transcript before notice of the motion to dismiss, but is not answered by filing after such notice but before the hearing.

3. Rule XIV of the supreme court: 177 Cal. xliii, 176 Pac. vii. For earlier statements of this same principle, see rule XIV as stated in 160 Cal. xli, 119 Pac. ix; 144 Cal. xxxix, 79 Pac. vii; 130 Cal. xxxv, 64 Pac. vii; and rule XII as stated in 64 Cal. 635; 52 Cal. 677; 41 Cal. 695; 37 Cal. 705; 28 Cal. 686; 26 Cal. 693; 11 Cal. 408.

make it correspond to the record.⁶ Consequently, an appellant cannot file, upon a suggestion of a diminution of the record, orders of the lower court which do not form any part of the record on the appeal;⁷ nor request a supplement transcript containing matters which have not been made a part of the record.⁸ He may, however, have portions of the record, omitted from the transcript, brought up.⁹

In general, the court should be liberal in granting amendments which can cause the respondent no injustice and which will secure to the appellant a hearing on the merits.¹⁰ After a case is on the calendar and has been submitted for decision, however, it requires a very strong showing to justify the court in allowing the transcript to be materially changed by supplying papers which have been deliberately omitted.¹¹

It is the duty of counsel to have material clerical and typographical errors in the transcript corrected, and they must see to it that the corrections are made in all the copies filed with the clerk.¹² And after an order has been issued directing the clerk to certify up a portion of the record omitted, it is the duty of the appellant to see that the order is complied with.¹³ Amendments to the record should be incorporated in their proper place in the original document.¹⁴

§ 386. Amendment by Trial Court.—The taking of an appeal does not suspend or impair the power of the lower court over its own records,¹⁵ or vest such power in the appellate court.¹⁶ Consequently, if there is any error in the record on appeal, the application to correct it must be made to the court in the record of which the error exists,¹⁷ for that is the court which has power to alter it so as to make it speak the truth.¹⁸ For instance, if part of the record has been lost, application to correct the defect should be made in the court below.¹⁹ The proper procedure in such case is for the lower court to direct that proved copies be substituted for the lost papers and that they shall constitute the record lost. It should not direct that the copies shall be used on appeal, for the law designates what shall constitute such record.²⁰ Thus, where the original copy of the summons, or of the notice of appeal, has been lost, a showing may be made in the lower court that it was duly served. Upon an order below that a copy, with an affidavit showing its service, be filed nunc pro tunc, the substituted papers are entitled to the same weight as are the originals.¹ Similarly, if the record on appeal does not contain any such order as that appealed from, the appellant may, with leave of the appellate court, have the order, entered nunc pro tunc and certified up.² Under the procedure in California the power of the court to amend its record is derived from section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and must be exercised within the six months' period limited thereby.³ It has been assumed, though not decided, that an order refusing to change the records is appealable,⁴ but it has been said that the acts of the court in exercising its inherent power to amend its record, or to supply a lost record, will be presumed to have been properly exercised.⁵

§ 387. Amendment by Appellate Court.—The rule is well settled that it is no part of the province of the appellate courts to amend the records of the court below,⁶ although it may correct the transcript on appeal in order to make it correspond to the actual record.⁷ As the reason for this rule, it has been said that the record in the appellate court is a transcript of the record of the court below, and that the appellate court has no authority to say what this record is or shall be.⁸ Furthermore, it would be a departure from all principle to allow a record sent to the appellate court to be assailed by evidence of less dignity than a record.⁹ Consequently, the appellate court can only act upon the transcript of the record as it exists in the lower court, duly authenticated in the mode prescribed by law.¹⁰

Pursuant to this rule, the appellate court cannot make an order to supply a lost record,¹¹ nor allow a showing that the notice of appeal was served on a date different from that stated in the transcript.¹² Neither can the appellate court make changes in the bill of exceptions settled below,¹³ nor, under the former practice, in the statement on appeal,¹⁴ or in the statement on motion for new trial.¹⁵

§ 388. Correction of Transcript by Appellate Court.—

While the appellate court has no authority to vary or amend the record itself,¹⁶ it may order a document to be inserted in or stricken from the transcript in order to perfect it.¹⁷ Thus, the appellate court may grant a motion of the appellant to allow him to complete the record by supplying a properly certified copy of the notice of appeal;¹⁸ a sufficient affidavit of the service thereof;¹⁹ or a copy of the undertaking on appeal.²⁰ Furthermore, the appellate court may correct the judgment copied into the transcript in order to make it correspond to the judgment in fact rendered by the trial court;¹ may supply omissions in an incomplete copy of a bill of exceptions to make it correspond to the bill actually settled by the trial judge;² and may, despite a stipulation that the transcript is correct, complete the judgment-roll by adding thereto special verdicts omitted in the transcript.³

It is not the proper practice, however, to move in the appellate court to strike out portions of the transcript on the ground that they are no part of the record,⁴ for the appellate court cannot well entertain and consider motions of this character in advance of a hearing of the appeal upon its merits.⁵ If the matters objected to form no part of the record, they will not be considered by the appellate court in determining the appeal.⁶

Correction of copies.—It is the duty of counsel to see that the copies of the transcript intended for members of the court literally conform to the transcript filed in the office of the clerk.⁷ If corrections are made, they should be made in all of the copies,⁸ for in the great majority of cases the appellate judges never see the transcript filed in the clerk's office, but depend entirely upon the copies sent to the consultation room for the use of members of the court.⁹

§ 389. Original Writs to Bring Up Record.—In several cases the California courts have considered the availability of original writs to bring up the record. Where the action of the lower court is founded upon a judgment in an earlier case, they have held that the record of the court in the earlier case may be brought up by certiorari. It need not be included in a bill of exceptions, for it is already a part of the record below,¹⁰ and the only purpose of a bill of exceptions is to make a record of that which without it is not a record.¹¹ Furthermore, mandamus is available, as earlier sections of this article have pointed out, to compel the trial judge to settle a bill of exceptions,¹² or to authenticate a reporter's transcript.¹³ In general, it seems that a court which has appellate jurisdiction and authority to issue necessary writs may frame and issue an appropriate writ for the purpose of bringing up a record from an inferior court to enable it to review alleged errors.¹⁴

Mandamus will not lie, however, to compel the clerk of the court below to certify to the correctness of the transcript, for the appellant has an adequate remedy in a motion in the court below to compel such certification.¹⁵ Furthermore, a writ of review will not be granted to compel the trial judge to authenticate certain papers, for the judge does not exceed his jurisdiction if he omits matters from the transcript.¹⁶

Conclusiveness and Impeachment.

§ 390. Conclusiveness Generally.—The presumption of verity which attaches to the record of a domestic judgment is the same upon appeal therefrom as upon collateral attack; except that upon a direct attack, there is no presumption in favor of the existence of any fact essential to the jurisdiction of the court over the defendant, and the defendant may, by bill of exceptions, present evidence outside of the record for the purpose of showing that the court did not have such jurisdiction. In both cases the record is conclusive as to all matters as to which it speaks unless properly impeached.¹⁷ Where the appellant brings up the amended complaint as a part of the record and as one of the papers on file in the cause, he is estopped to deny that it has been duly filed.¹⁸ Where the record does not disclose that an instruction was given, the appellate court is bound thereby and must hold that the omission occurred.¹⁹ Attention has already been directed to the rule that a settled bill of exceptions is conclusive,²⁰ and to the rule that the record of the court below cannot be amended by the appellate tribunal.¹

Clerk's certificate to transcript.—It has been repeatedly decided that the appellate court is not bound by the certificate of the clerk as to the correctness of a record.² The law does not impose upon the clerk the duty of certifying to the identity of the papers used at the hearing below,³ and his certificate to that effect is therefore not determinative as against his subsequent statement that he signed by mistake and without knowledge of the facts.⁴ As against the certificate of the clerk, however, the mere statement of counsel that errors exist in the transcript does not establish that fact.⁵

§ 391. Conclusiveness of Recitals.—Recitals which are properly in a judgment, although not necessary to its validity, are conclusive evidence of the action of the court below, in the absence of a bill of exceptions.⁶ Thus, where the judgment recites that the defendant was “duly and regularly summoned,” it will be presumed upon direct appeal, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that summons by publication was made under proper order and sufficient affidavit, notwithstanding an order of publication tending to show otherwise.⁷ Similarly, where the judgment recites that certain parties appeared, this recital is conclusive on the appellate court, particularly when there is nothing in the record to the contrary.⁸

A recital in the order appealed from that the matter "came on regularly for hearing this day" must be presumed to be true, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary;⁹ and recitals of the transcript must be taken as conclusive as to the time when a motion was submitted.¹⁰ So, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, the recitals of an amended answer, being a part of the judgment-roll, must be accepted as verity.¹¹ But a recital in the findings that there was a waiver of jury trial cannot prevail against a showing in a bill of exceptions that a jury was demanded and denied.¹²

§ 392. Impeachment of Record.—Affidavits cannot be used to attack any portions of the transcript,¹³ and therefore cannot be used to show that the notice of appeal was filed on a different day than that set out by the record.¹⁴ Where the record indicates the proper order of proceedings, it is doubtful whether affidavits can be received to show a different order.¹⁵

The certificate of the clerk of the court below cannot be received to contradict the plain import of the judgment itself.¹⁶ Similarly, where the record shows that the judgment or order appealed from was rendered on a certain date, and the parties have stipulated that the transcript is correct, entry at a different date cannot be shown by

X. QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

In General.

§ 393. General Rule.—It is a general rule that matters which are not a part of the record cannot be considered on appeal,¹ even though included in the transcript,² or though presented by the record in another appeal.³ To enable the appellate court to review the action of the court below, the record must show precisely what action was invoked in that court and the precise ruling that was made therein.⁴ There is no authority or principle which will justify a court of appeal in going beyond the scope of an order or judgment from which an appeal is taken and reviewing matters as to which there is absolute silence in the record,⁵ for an appellate court is not at liberty to interpolate into the record any matter which did not form an element in the case as it was presented below.⁶ Error must be shown affirmatively by the record,⁷ for every presumption is in favor of the action of the court below.⁸ If the record brought up on appeal does not disclose the error relied on, there is nothing for the appellate court to examine,⁹ and the judgment appealed from should therefore be affirmed.¹⁰

§ 394. Application of Rule.—The rule that matters not contained in the record will not be considered on appeal has been applied to many matters, such as affidavits,¹¹ bills of lading,¹² maps,¹³ rules of the lower court,¹⁴ statements of counsel in their briefs,¹⁵ unauthenticated instructions of the trial court,¹⁶ matters set forth only in the specification of error,¹⁷ copies of a notice of intention to move for a new trial,¹⁸ and papers used below but not certified by the trial judge.¹⁹ A judgment-roll which is not in the record may not be considered, though the court is acquainted with its contents.²⁰ Similarly, matters of equitable cognizance which are outside the record, do not justify a rehearing on appeal, although of persuasive force.¹

Opinion of lower court.—The opinion of the lower court is not a part of the record on appeal,² and consequently cannot be reviewed or considered on appeal,³ even where it is incorporated in a bill of exceptions.⁴ Thus it cannot be used on appeal to supply findings to support either findings or judgment,⁵ nor to limit an order actually made.⁶

Limitations on rule.—The rule that a court will consider on a pending appeal only matters contained in the record is not inflexible nor of universal application. Matters often arise subsequent to the appeal which may be brought before the appellate court on evidence outside the record, and which will be considered and acted on in disposing of the appeal. Such matters may be the granting of a new trial; the occurrence of a fact creating a moot question; the repeal of a penal statute; the abolition of the jurisdiction of the appellate court; or the determination of a similar case.⁷ Furthermore, even matters which are not a part of the record have been considered as against

Record Omitting Evidence.—In general, it may be said that evidence which was introduced below will not be considered on appeal unless it is incorporated in the record.¹⁰ If the evidence is not set forth in the record, the appellate court will not consider an objection that the lower court failed to make a finding upon a material issue;¹¹ nor will it review the principles upon which a commissioner was ordered to state an account.¹² Where the evidence is not included in the record, the findings, including the special findings of the jury,¹³ are conclusive,¹⁴ for there is nothing to enable the appellate court to pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence.¹⁵ If the transcript is silent as to the evidence introduced, the appellant cannot raise the question that a judgment pleaded by the other party as an estoppel was not an estoppel at law.¹⁶ Where the statement on motion for new trial and the transcript are mere skeletons, omitting sundry papers purporting to have been put in evidence, the appellate court cannot undertake to examine the questions which the appeal was intended to present.¹⁷ Unless the evidence is in the record, the appellate court will not review a refusal to grant a trial in forma pauperis,¹⁸ a nonsuit or directed verdict,¹⁹ the sufficiency of the evidence,²⁰ or instructions given or refused.¹ Where the allegations of the complaint are not denied in the answer, however, the question whether the judgment was for too great a sum arises without bringing up the evidence.²

§ 396. Appeal on Judgment-roll.—Unless additional matter is brought into the record by a bill of exceptions,³ or a reporter's transcript,⁴ or, under the former practice, by a statement on motion for new trial,⁵ or a statement on appeal,⁶ the appellate court is limited in its determination to the questions presented by the judgment-roll.⁷ In such case the only question presented for review is whether or not the findings support the judgment;⁸ or, more accurately, the only questions to be considered are: (1) Did the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? (2) Are the findings within the issues? (3) Is the judgment supported by the findings? and (4) Does reversible error appear on the face of the record?⁹

No question arises as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings,¹⁰ or a nonsuit,¹¹ or rulings made during the taking of evidence.¹² The appellate court cannot in such case consider the pendency of another action based on the same cause of action.¹³ The findings made are conclusive,¹⁴ unless contradicted by other findings,¹⁵

Particular Questions.

§ 397. Interlocutory Orders.—The rule that matters not appearing in the record cannot be considered on appeal has often been applied in the case of interlocutory orders.¹⁸ Thus, it is the rule that an order granting a writ of attachment,¹⁹ an order refusing to permit the jury to view the premises,²⁰ and a restraining order and proceedings in connection therewith,¹ cannot be considered unless the record shows that the order in question was granted. Furthermore, it has been held that an order denying a motion to dissolve an attachment,² an order denying a motion for a nonsuit,³ and an order directing a receiver to pay funds in his hands into court,⁴ cannot be reviewed unless the record shows the grounds for the motion. Similarly, an order denying an application for a continuance will not be considered unless the affidavits on which the application was made are embodied in the record;⁵ and the disposition of a motion for a change of venue cannot be considered unless the affidavits on which it is based are made a part of the record by proper authentication.⁶ An order dissolving an injunction will not be reviewed where there is nothing in the record to show upon what the court acted,⁷ and the sufficiency of a writ of attachment will not be considered if the writ is not set forth in the record.⁸ Nevertheless, an order appointing a receiver may be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions containing the evidence on which the court acted, if facts justifying the order are neither averred in the pleadings nor shown in the findings.⁹

§ 398. Orders Relating to Pleadings.—Orders relating to pleadings will not be reviewed on appeal unless the facts are presented in the record.¹⁰ Thus, it has been held that unless the record shows that a demurrer was filed or acted upon, the appellate court will not consider alleged error in the fact that it was sustained,¹¹ or in the fact that it was overruled.¹² Unless the record shows that a demurrer was presented below, the appellate court will not review the lower court's failure to consider it.¹³ Similarly, an order refusing to allow an amendment to a pleading cannot be considered if there is nothing in the record to show that any proposed amendment was served or presented,¹⁴ or to show the nature of the proposed amendment.¹⁵ Furthermore, an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint, without leave to amend cannot be reviewed unless the record shows that the plaintiff asked leave to amend,¹⁶ and indicates what change he proposed to make.¹⁷ An order striking out a demurrer cannot be reviewed in the absence of a showing that the demurrer was well taken and would have been sustained if it had not been stricken out;¹⁸ and an order striking out a portion of a complaint cannot be reviewed unless the record shows what portion was stricken.¹⁹ To obtain a review of an order made upon a motion to dismiss a complaint, the record should show the papers read or evidence offered in its support.²⁰ Nevertheless, if it appears by bill of exceptions that an application to amend a complaint was denied on the ground that the complaint as amended would not state a cause of action, the proposed amendments should be considered on appeal in determining whether a cause of action was stated by the plaintiff in the lower court.¹

§ 399. Admission of Evidence.—Error in admitting evidence cannot be considered on appeal unless matters relating thereto are contained in the record.² Thus, error in allowing a witness to read a contract cannot be considered where the record does not contain the contract, or a showing of its contents or materiality;³ and error in admitting written instruments in evidence cannot be considered unless the record shows the purpose for which they were admitted, the grounds of the objection, and so much of the evidence as is necessary to indicate its per-

tinence and materiality.⁴ Error in admitting evidence of the location of school-land warrants on the ground that they were not recorded in the proper office cannot be considered on appeal unless the record shows that they were improperly recorded;⁵ and error in admitting a deed, under the former rule requiring a seal, could not be considered unless the record showed that there was no seal when the instrument was made.⁶ Similarly, objection that a verbal contract was admitted which should have been in writing cannot be considered where it does not appear which party introduced it or that either party objected to it.⁷

Error in admitting a judgment-roll, or in refusing to strike it out, cannot be considered where there is nothing in the record to show what the judgment-roll was;⁸ and error in admitting a notice cannot be considered when the record does not contain the notice.⁹ Indeed, it has been said, perhaps too broadly, that error in permitting testimony cannot be considered unless all of the evidence is in the record.¹⁰ Certainly error in overruling an objection to a question asked a witness cannot be considered where the record fails to show that the witness answered the question;¹¹ or, where the question was asked on cross-examination, where the record does not show his testimony on direct examination.¹² Whether or not the answer of a witness was responsive cannot be considered if the question put does not appear in the record.¹³

§ 400. Exclusion of Evidence.—Where error consists in the exclusion of evidence, the error imputed must clearly appear.¹⁴ In general, the court will not consider the exclusion of evidence unless it has before it, as a part of the record, the evidence proposed to be given and rejected,¹⁵ or a showing of its materiality.¹⁶ Thus, the exclusion of testimony will not be considered when there is nothing to show its purpose, materiality or relevancy,¹⁷ or that it was in fact offered.¹⁸ Error in sustaining an objection to a question asked a witness cannot be considered where there is nothing to show that the witness' answer would have been relevant and competent,¹⁹ and error in striking out the answer of the witness on the ground that it was not responsive cannot be considered when the question asked is not made to appear.²⁰ To show error in rejecting a witness who is incompetent for most purposes, the record should show the specific purpose for which he was offered.¹

Documentary evidence.—The rule that errors in excluding evidence will not be considered unless the evidence excluded, or a showing of its materiality, appears in the record, is especially true of writings offered in evidence, where, unless the offered papers are set forth or some statement is made as to their contents, it is impossible to ascertain whether in fact they bore upon the questions in issue at the trial.² Thus the appellate court will not consider the exclusion of affidavits,³ articles of incorporation or by-laws,⁴ depositions,⁵ letters,⁶ judgment-rolls,⁷ sheets of a ledger,⁸ or papers generally,⁹ when they do not appear in the record. Similarly, the appellate courts will not review the exclusion of a deposition when there is nothing in the record which gives the slightest intimation of its contents,¹⁰ or which shows whether it was material, relevant or competent.¹¹ So, also, the rejection of the pleadings in another action cannot be reviewed when there is nothing in the record to show the character of that action or the parties thereto.¹²

§ 401. Sufficiency of Evidence.—The appellate court will not consider the question of the sufficiency of the evidence unless all of the evidence is included in the record on appeal.¹³ The rule of law in such cases is that every intend-

ment must be in favor of the verdict or decision of the court below, and in support of the judgment it will be presumed that the omitted evidence authorized the decision or judgment, unless there be something in the record to overcome such presumption.¹⁴ This rule is applicable not only with reference to the verdict and findings supporting an ordinary judgment,¹⁵ but also in connection with an order of nonsuit,¹⁶ an order granting an injunction,¹⁷ the findings of a referee,¹⁸ and the special verdict of a jury.¹⁹ Where a written contract is introduced in evidence, but is not included in the record, the appellate court cannot determine that the evidence is insufficient to sustain findings as to the compliance of the parties therewith.²⁰ It has been held that the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict cannot be considered unless the record shows that a motion for new trial was not only made, but acted upon.¹

It seems that if the appellant insists upon the insufficiency of the evidence on certain points, the record should contain all of the evidence on these points, but that the evidence not bearing on these points is irrelevant.² And where the record purports, in express terms, to set forth all of the evidence, the appellate court is not at liberty to presume that there was any other.³

§ 402. Instructions Given or Refused.—The giving of an instruction cannot be reviewed by the appellate court unless the record sets forth the instruction in question;⁴ shows that it was given and excepted to,⁵ and that it was not requested by the appellant;⁶ proves that harm resulted therefrom,⁷ and, unless the instruction would have been erroneous under any state of facts, contains a statement of the evidence given.⁸ Similarly, the refusing of an instruction cannot be reviewed unless the record sets it forth;⁹ shows that it was requested and refused;¹⁰ and states the facts of the case¹¹ and the evidence given.¹²

Indeed, unless all of the instructions given are contained in the record, the appellate court cannot review particular instructions given¹³ or refused.¹⁴ It cannot in such event consider instructions given, for isolated excerpts might, as an abstract proposition of law, appear errone-

of the instructions,¹ and a motion to dismiss a motion for new trial will not be reviewed unless the facts in support thereof appear in the record.² An order denying a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was not reviewable unless the record contained the evidence given at the trial,³ and the evidence newly discovered.⁴ In reviewing an order granting a new trial, however, the appellate court is not limited to a review of the grounds considered by the lower court if other grounds are presented by the record.⁵

§ 404. Miscellaneous Questions.—The appellate court will not consider the ground on which the lower court acted unless it is disclosed by the record.⁶ It will not review the failure to serve an amended complaint where it does not appear in the record.⁷ Where a new trial is granted unless the plaintiff waives a portion of the judgment awarded, the defendant in appealing from the judgment and order, must show in the record that the amount was remitted, or it will be unnecessary for the appellate court to examine and pass upon the questions attempted to be presented.⁸

Statute of limitations.—If the record on appeal does not show when the action in question was commenced, there is an entire absence of a fact without which the appellate court can form no opinion upon the question presented.⁹ Consequently, if the appellate court is to consider a defense founded upon the statute of limitations, the record should show when the complaint was filed,¹⁰ and the judgment-roll should include the original complaint even if it has been superseded by an amended complaint,¹¹ and also the answer or demurrer.¹² A contention that the plaintiff's demand is stale cannot be sustained if the complaint, on its face, does not show a stale demand, and there is nothing in the findings or conclusions of the court below to suggest such a defense.¹³

Constitution of jury.—An objection to the drawing and constitution of the jury will not be considered if there is nothing in the record to show that the jury was not what the appellant claims it ought to have been.¹⁴ An objection to the court's refusal to allow a challenge for bias will not be reviewed unless the record shows that a peremptory challenge was exercised upon the juror, or that the peremptory challenges were exhausted.¹⁵

Arguments and reading to jury.—Error predicated on irregular remarks of counsel in addressing the jury cannot be considered where the record does not contain the language used or show the extent or character of the alleged irregularity.¹⁶ The appellate court cannot consider the fact that in reinstructing the jury, a portion of certain testimony was read to them from the shorthand reporter's notes, unless the record shows what portion of the testimony was thus read.¹⁷

Orders relating to costs.—An order with regard to costs will not be reviewed where the record fails to show what costs had accrued,¹⁸ fails to include a bill of costs or an order thereon,¹⁹ or fails to show any objection to costs, or any ruling or judgment involving them.²⁰ An order denying a motion to strike out a bill of costs will not be considered if the record does not show the papers or evidence offered at the hearing of the motion.¹ Similarly, an order disposing of a motion to retax costs will not be considered on appeal where the record does not include the notices and affidavits filed on the motion,² but will be reversed if the record shows error.³

J. ASSIGNMENT AND SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.

I. NATURE AND NECESSITY FOR.

§ 405. In General.—California practice provided for a specification of errors in the statement on appeal and statement on motion for new trial prior to 1915, and both before and since that time, for a specification in the statement on new trial or bill of exceptions of the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to sustain the verdict or decision.⁴ The specification of errors in the statement on motion for new trial was regarded under the Practice Act as a part of the statement. It was not intended merely for use as points at the argument, but as part of the case, and to enable the adverse party to propose amendments presenting such matters as in his judgment tended to sustain the verdict or decision.⁵ It served to select out of the mass of alleged errors and insufficiency found in the statement, and by this selection to preserve such of the matters appearing therein upon which it was the purpose of the party to finally rely in support of the motion.⁶

Under the code, a specification of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict or decision is in the nature of a notice to the opposing party and the court, so that such party may propose such amendments to the statement or bill of exceptions as may be necessary to sustain the findings and so that the court may abbreviate the statement or bill of exceptions by striking out redundant and useless matter.⁷

An assignment of errors at common law was in the nature of a pleading,⁸ to which there was a demurrer or joinder in error.⁹ In the strict common-law sense of the term it was a formal specification of the points or particular errors relied on by the appellant as grounds for reversal.¹⁰ It did not constitute a part of the transcript but was founded upon it, and was filed in the appellate court at or subsequent to the time of filing the transcript.¹¹ The filing of such an assignment of errors was never required under the system of practice in California, though the term has often been used in the reports in a sense somewhat different from, but analogous to, its common-law sense.¹²

§ 406. Specification of Errors of Law—Under Practice Act.—In the statement on appeal under the Practice Act, a party intending to appeal was required before 1863 to state the grounds upon which he intended to rely and so much of the evidence as might be necessary to explain the grounds and no more;¹³ and, after the amendment of 1863, to state specifically the particular errors or grounds upon which he intended to rely.¹⁴ It was optional with the appellant whether to make a statement or not. If he made no statement, it was not necessary that there should be in the transcript or on file what had hitherto been denominated an assignment of errors, or any statement of the grounds upon which he relied, as neither the statutes nor the rules of the court required it. In such case, only the errors appearing on the judgment-roll could be considered.¹⁵ But if he made a statement, the specification of the errors or grounds was an essential element of the

for want of a specific statement of errors, or of anything in the nature of a brief on the part of the appellant to direct the attention of the court to the points relied on, or aid the court in the examination of the record). statement,¹⁶ and errors or grounds not specified therein were not reviewable on appeal.¹⁷

Under the code.—In the statement on motion for new trial, the Practice Act, as originally enacted, required a party intending to move for a new trial to prepare a statement of the grounds upon which he intended to rely. This act was amended in 1861,¹⁸ and again in 1863. The statute as last amended was incorporated in the code in 1874, where it remained until 1915. As originally appearing in the code, the act provided that

“When the notice designates, as the ground of the motion, errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the moving party, the statement shall specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely. If no such specifications be made, the statement shall be disregarded on the hearing of the motion.”¹⁹

Inasmuch as the trial court was directed to disregard the statement if it did not contain a specification as required by the statute, it followed that the appellate court could not consider a statement deficient in this respect.²⁰ It will clarify an understanding of the rule and the bearing of the changes in the law to note that under the present practice specifications of error, when required, relate only to the form of exceptions when upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision. "In all such instances the objection must specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient." If the appeal is taken by the new or alternative method and a transcript is used in lieu of a bill of exceptions, no specifications of error are necessary.¹ It is to be noted also that lack of specifications of error is not a ground for dismissal of an appeal.² Under the rule requiring a specification of particular errors, those not assigned are deemed to have been waived, and cannot be reviewed,³ unless the error be apparent on the face of the judgment-roll and an appeal lies from the final judgment.⁴

The rule is declared by many of the authorities that no specification of the particular errors of law on which the appellant intends to rely need be made in a bill of exceptions in order that the errors therein set forth may be reviewed upon appeal.⁵ And of course no assignment or specification of errors is necessary or proper in a notice of appeal.⁶

provides that when the exception is to the verdict or decision upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, the objection must specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient.⁷ There was a similar provision with reference to statements on motion for new trial in the Practice Act as amended in 1861,⁸ and in the Code of Civil Procedure prior to 1915, before statements on motion for new trial were abolished.⁹

The rule has been stated as follows in a very recent decision:

“Even though a motion for a new trial must now be made upon the minutes of the court and no bill of exceptions is necessary or can be used for the purposes of the motion in the lower court, yet where the motion is denied, and it is sought to review the order denying it on appeal, and the record is not brought up in the manner prescribed by section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure (the so-called new method), it can only be brought up by a bill of exceptions prepared and settled after the order denying the motion is made in conformity with the practice which has always prevailed in connection with motions for a new trial made upon the minutes. . . . And to such a bill of exceptions, . . . section 648, Code of Civil Procedure, requiring a specification of the particulars in which the findings are not supported by the judgment, applies.”¹⁰

Upon such an appeal, therefore, if there is no specification of the particulars in which the evidence was insufficient, or if the specification made is defective and not entitled to consideration, the appellate court cannot review the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings or verdict, but must accept the findings of fact or the verdict as true,¹¹ at least if there is not trial.¹⁵ If certain particulars are specified wherein the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict or findings, the appellant cannot on appeal urge that the verdict or findings are unsupported in other particulars.¹⁶ When, however, the appellant proceeds under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure in preparing the record on appeal, an authenticated reporter's transcript may be used on appeal instead of a bill of exceptions, and no specification of the insufficiency of the evidence need be made. Such specification is required in a bill of exceptions, not primarily for use on appeal, but for information of the opposing party and the court below, so that they may be advised as to the matter that should be inserted in the bill. As the reporter's transcript contains all the evidence taken, there is no occasion for any such specification, and the code does not require them to be inserted therein.¹⁷

§ 408. Review of Particular Matters.—To say that a verdict for damages was enhanced by passion or prejudice is one mode of saying that the evidence did not justify the verdict, and a specification of particulars is necessary if such question is to be reviewed on appeal.¹⁸ The code does not require a specification of the insufficiency of the evidence on appeals from appealable orders, although such orders are often founded upon evidence dehors the pleadings. Neither does it require such specification upon an appeal from a judgment to enable the court to review non-

The latter ruling is properly presented by an exception thereto.²

II. FORM AND REQUISITES.

§ 409. Policy of Courts as to Sufficiency.—There has been a decided change in the policy of the courts with reference to the specifications of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict or decision. In many of the cases the specification seems to have been regarded as a pleading, as a sort of a complaint in error, where all intendments were against the pleader, and where the moving party was not even allowed the benefit of the rule that errors should be disregarded, if injury had not been done. But this view is now discredited. The specification is in the nature of a notice, and its sufficiency should be tested by inquiring whether the opposite party is injured by defects. It is not even to be regarded with the strictness with which an error of the court must be. If error at all, it is committed by a party, and in a matter where great liberality should be exercised by the courts.³ Therefore, the earlier strictness of the rule governing the sufficiency of specifications has properly been abated by the later decisions in harmony with the more liberal view which will insure a hearing upon appeal where reasonable and ordinarily careful precautions have been taken to present specifications, rather than to defeat the right to be heard upon purely technical grounds.⁴

The principal object in requiring a specification of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict or decision is to abbreviate the statement of evidence by restricting it to such as is relevant and material to prove or disprove the specified fact. By the specifications required, the opposing party and the judge are notified of the exact points of contest, and thereby enabled to determine what evidence should be brought into the bill of exceptions, or, under the former practice, the statement, and what should be excluded from it.⁵ The statute in this matter is not primarily for the appellate court, but for the trial court, and the respondent.⁶ Hence, whenever there is a reasonably successful effort to state the particulars, and they are such as may have been sufficient to inform the opposing counsel and the court of the grounds, the court of review ought not to refuse to consider the case upon appeal, especially where the transcript shows that all the evidence has been brought up.⁷

In such case, the burden should be on the party sustaining the findings to call attention, at least, to enough evidence to sustain the one assailed.¹²

§ 411. Directing Specification at Findings of Fact.— Inasmuch as it is clear that a judgment supported by a verdict or findings cannot be assailed on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, so long as the verdict or findings remain undisturbed, the attack must be, not upon the judgment directly, but upon the verdict or findings which support it.¹³ Specifications as to the insufficiency must be directed to material findings of fact.¹⁴ This statement is borne out by the provision of the code which requires a specification of the insufficiency of the evidence “to justify the verdict or decision.”¹⁵ The word “decision” in this provision, placed as it is in opposition to the word “verdict,” obviously refers to the findings of fact and conclusions of law mentioned in section 633 of the same code.¹⁶ A specification pointed at the judgment and stating that it is contrary to the evidence will not enable the court to inquire whether the findings are justified by the evidence, and is therefore insufficient. Especially is this so where it is evident that the specification is directed to the general conclusion and not to the findings of fact.¹⁷ Likewise, specifications should not be directed at conclusions of law. But if the court includes in its findings that which is more properly a conclusion of law, and if such so-called finding raises an implication of certain facts, a specification directed to such finding is insufficient.¹⁸ Of course, the finding assailed must have been actually found by the court or jury. If there is no such finding as that set out, the specification will be disregarded.¹⁹

§ 412. Particularity as to "Verdict or Decision."—The code requires that the specification state the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient "to justify the verdict or decision."²⁰ The verdict or decision involves finding on all the facts necessary to support the judgment, and it is the duty of the party to specify the particular finding of fact which is alleged not to be supported by the evidence.¹ Notwithstanding the earlier

strictness of the rule governing the sufficiency of specifications has been much abated by later decisions, it is nevertheless necessary in any case that the specification convey a fair and correct knowledge both to the adverse party and to the trial court of the precise findings excepted to.² If a general verdict is returned, it is insufficient merely to state that there is no evidence to support the verdict.³ And if the case is tried by the court and more than one finding is made, it is not sufficient to state that the "findings" are not supported by the evidence,⁴ or that upon the facts and evidence the court should have rendered its decision for the appellant.⁵ The specification should in some form distinguish each particular proposition of fact excepted to from all others found by the court or involved in a general verdict of the jury.⁶ Where, however, a single fact is found, it is sufficient in the specification to state that the finding is not justified by the evidence or is contrary thereto;⁷ and such a specification of a particular fact involved in a general verdict would probably be held sufficient.⁸ It has been held that if a finding involves several distinct propositions of fact, a specification that such finding (designating it by number) is contrary to the evidence is insufficient.⁹ But if all the propositions except one relate to matters entirely immaterial and to questions as to which there is no dispute, and the respondent is not misled thereby, such a specification is sufficient.¹⁰

The earlier cases distinguished between findings of ultimate and findings of probative facts, and held that a specification which only says that the finding is not sustained by the evidence would be insufficient if the finding excepted to were the finding of an ultimate fact, but would be sufficient if the finding were that of a probative fact merely.¹¹ But this distinction has been abandoned, and now it is entirely immaterial whether a specification of a particular wherein the evidence is claimed to be insufficient to justify a verdict or decision points to a probative fact or to an ultimate fact.¹² It is now the rule that the specifications are sufficient when they are as specific as the findings themselves.¹³ Hence, it has been held that a specification is sufficient when it points to a particular finding, or if the motion for a new trial is directed against a general verdict or an omnibus finding that all or certain allegations of the complaint or answer are true, or, if it be a judgment without findings, it need be no more specific than the issues distinctly made by the pleadings.¹⁴

§ 413. Specification Affirmative in Form.—In accordance with the earlier strictness with which the courts regarded specifications, it had often been held that a specification that the evidence shows certain facts to be true is insufficient standing alone.¹⁵ In like manner a specification of what the court should have found was held insufficient because this was merely another method of stating what the evidence showed.¹⁶ But these cases have been overruled, and in accordance with the liberal policy now adhered to, such a specification would be sufficient where the meaning is the same as if the specification had been negative in form. While the negative form is preferable, a positive form of statement is now permitted.¹⁷ Thus, a specification, in an action for damages for injuries received by a servant, that "it clearly appears from the evidence that plaintiff knew that the work" was attended with danger is equivalent to a specification that the evidence is insufficient to show that the plaintiff did not know that the work was attended with danger.¹⁸ So, also, a specification is sufficient which states that a finding that the defendant is the owner of land is unsupported by the evidence."¹⁹ In like manner, a specification that the court erred in finding "certain facts" (designating them) is now deemed sufficient,²⁰ though formerly the rule was otherwise.¹

(this case, which seems to be the authority most generally relied on in attacks upon the sufficiency of specifications to findings, was overruled in Harris v. Duarte, 141 Cal. 497, 70 Pac. 298, 75 Pac. 58; and see Kelly v. Mack, 49 Cal. 523).

§ 414. Setting Out Finding.—The finding excepted to may be designated by quoting it or the part excepted to. If in quoting a finding, matter not contained in it is stated, such matter may be rejected as surplusage where there is no doubt as to the finding referred to. If, in addition thereto, the appellant attempts to designate the finding by number, the specification is not vitiated by a reference to a wrong number if the finding referred to is sufficiently clear.² Care must be observed, however, where the trial court makes a finding that an allegation in the complaint is untrue, negating, in this, the precise words of the complaint. For example, where in an action to set aside a deed the plaintiff alleges that he signed the deed without reading it, and the court finds "that it is not true that the plaintiff signed the deed without reading it," a specification is insufficient which paraphrases the court's finding and states that there is no evidence to justify the finding that the plaintiff signed the deed without reading it. Such a specification does not state that the finding is not sustained by the evidence, but goes over the finding and states that the allegation in the complaint is not sustained by the evidence. In such case the plaintiff in effect agrees with the court that his allegation was not proved.³

K. BRIEFS.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

§ 415. Definition and Purpose.—A brief of points and authorities upon appeal is a printed document to aid the appellate court in considering the case, as well as to advise opposing counsel of the questions to be presented and the authorities relied upon in reference to them. It is the vehicle of counsel to convey to the court the essential facts of his client's case, a statement of the questions of law involved, the law he would have applied and the application he desires made of it by the court.⁴ It is distinct from a bill of exceptions or other document, and the irregular interpolation of points and authorities in a bill of exceptions or document purporting to be such will not suffice as an opening brief on appeal.⁵

§ 416. Necessity for.—A brief is required on the part of an appellant to inform the court of facts of the particular case and the points relied on for reversal. If no brief has been filed in behalf of the appellant and there is no appearance on his behalf at the oral argument, the appellate court is not called upon to give any consideration to his appeal.⁶ It will not perform the duty of counsel by examining the record to ascertain if possible error may not have intervened in the court below, but will dismiss the appeal upon motion of the respondent,⁷ or, in the absence of such motion, it will affirm the judgment or order of the court below without an examination of the record.⁸ Frequently, though, the court, in disposing of the appeal upon this ground states that its examination of the record discloses no error.⁹ It has been held that the insolvency of the respondent does not excuse the appellant from filing his brief.¹⁰

A brief is required of the respondent for the purpose of sustaining the action of the trial court. Formerly, it was the rule that in the absence of a printed brief or oral argument on the part of the respondent, the appellate court would assume without looking into the record, that the points urged by the appellant were well taken.¹¹ But this rule is no longer applicable in its full extent, since the amendment of section 4½ of article VI of the constitution. Under this provision it is incumbent upon an appellant proceeding under the alternative method to print in his brief such portions of the record as he deems essential to a correct understanding of the appeal, and while in the absence of any brief on the part of the respondent the appeal may be determined upon those portions of the record printed in the appellant's brief, it is incumbent upon him to show that the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice, even in the absence of any brief or appearance on behalf of the respondent.¹²

§ 417. Compliance With Supreme Court Rules.—The right of an appellant to be heard depends, in the first place, upon his compliance with the Code of Civil Procedure in taking his appeal, as well in the manner as within the time provided by the code. After his appeal has been taken his right to a consideration thereof by a court of review depends upon his compliance with the rules of court in perfecting his appeal by filing his transcript, and, thereafter, his points and authorities in accordance with and within the time specified in those rules.¹³ The constitution authorizes the supreme court to make and adopt rules not inconsistent with law for the government of the supreme court and of the district courts of appeal and of the officers thereof, and for regulating the practice in said courts.¹⁴ Rules of practice made pursuant to this provision have the force of positive law so far as the rights of the parties are concerned, provided such rules do not conflict with any act of the legislature.¹⁵ They confer rights which may be enforced by litigants,¹⁶ and will be strictly enforced where they are of such a nature that important rights are given by them.¹⁷

17. Brooks v. Union Trust & R. Co., 146 Cal. 134, 79 Pac. 843. In order that the court may control its calendars and dispose of its business in an orderly and convenient manner, a compliance with the supreme court rules will be exacted. Long v. American Surety Co., 11 Cal. App. 94, 103 Pac. 1094.

Relaxation of rules.—While a compliance with the rules prescribed by the court is necessary in general, they are but a means to accomplish the ends of justice, and it is always in the power of a court to suspend its rules or to except a particular case from their operation, whenever the purposes of justice require it.¹⁸ The court may, upon proper terms, allow a departure from its rules in cases where it is shown that by unavoidable accident or excusable mistake parties have been prevented from observing them; and where it appears that substantial injury will be inflicted by their enforcement. Ordinarily, though, the court is reluctant to vary in the least from the exact practice prescribed.¹⁹

II. FORM AND REQUISITES.

§ 418. In General—Opening brief.—The appellant's opening brief is required to be printed,²⁰ and to contain a statement of the essential facts of his case;¹ a statement of the questions of law involved in the appeal and to be decided by the court,² with a reference to the page of the transcript and folio where the erroneous ruling is to be found,³ the law he would have applied,⁴ and the application he desires made of it by the court.⁵ An appellant should not inject into his brief a discussion of facts outside of the record. Such statements cannot be considered by the court in arriving at a decision.⁶ But they may be

Respondent's brief.—Statements of facts contained in the brief of an appellant are presumably correct, and if there is any error in them, it is the duty of the respondent to point out what essential statements are omitted and to state them as an addition to appellant's statement, with references to the record. Under section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring the printing in the brief of such portions of the record as are pertinent, if the respondent files no brief, the appellate court will accept the evidence as set out in the appellant's brief as true and correct.⁹ Although the appellate court, when reviewing the action of a superior court granting an application for an order, is not limited to the reasons specified by the court in its order,¹⁰ the failure of the respondent in his brief to advance other reasons in support of the order authorizes the court to assume no other valid ground exists.¹¹

Stating points separately.—Rule VIII of the supreme court provides in part:

“The briefs must present each point separately under an appropriate subheading, showing the nature of the question to be presented.”

§ 420. Limitation on Rule.—The rule requiring an appellant to point out errors relied upon is not a hard-and-fast one. It is designed for the convenience and aid of the reviewing courts, to save them the time and trouble of searching the record of a case for the purpose of determining whether the complaints made by counsel are well founded or not. The court is at liberty to decide a case upon any points that its proper decision may require, whether taken by counsel or not.¹⁵ If the court desires to act upon the presumption of waiver of questions not pointed out in the briefs, it may do so. Conversely, if it is disposed to take up such points at the expense of labor and trouble which the attorneys should have attended to, there is no reason why it should not do so.¹⁶ The court may therefore depart from the rule where an alleged error is specified in the assignments of error, and it is apparent from an examination of the record that it is prejudicial,¹⁷ or to determine whether an order of the trial court can be supported upon any ground.¹⁸ And if it should be brought to the attention of the court before its judgment had become final that upon the face of the record the judgment appealed from was in contravention of some statute or well-established rule of law, it would be justified in setting aside its judgment of affirmance, even though the appellant had not pointed out the objection, or its attention had not been called to the matter until after it had filed its opinion. This is not a rule, however, which can be invoked by the respondent as a matter of right.¹⁹

§ 421. Application of Rule.—Where error in excluding testimony to prove a fact is relied on, the appellant must point out the evidence by which he sought to prove the fact.²⁰ When it is contended that the evidence does not sustain the findings, the appellant must point out in his brief the evidence,¹ and the particular finding or findings claimed to be unsupported,² and he must show wherein the evidence does not sustain the findings.³ Otherwise, as the finding of the trial court when brought up on appeal is to be deemed correct, rather than erroneous, it will be upheld by the court.⁴

An omnibus objection that each and every ruling of the court below, which was made the object of objection and exception, was erroneous, which cites many folios of the transcript but does not point out why error is claimed as to any of the assignments, may be ignored.⁵ And where counsel contents himself with saying he does not waive other errors assigned but not discussed, and asks the court to examine them as set forth in the specification of errors, the appellate court is justified in the conclusion that they are not important.⁶

Error in giving or refusing instructions.—When an appellant complains of error in the giving or refusing of instructions, he should point out the error in his brief. It is insufficient merely to state that the exceptions to the charge of the court were well taken,⁷ or that the court erred in refusing to give instructions asked on the part of the appellant.⁸ The court cannot be expected to search through the instructions given or offered to find those to which the general discourse of the appellant may apply.⁹ Nor is it sufficient to state that the court erred in giving a particular instruction, designating it by number. In fairness to the court and to opposing counsel, the appellant should not only indicate instructions objected to, but he should also point out in what respect the instructions questioned are erroneous.¹⁰ In the case of a refusal of instructions the appellant should point out and state the proposition of law requested,¹¹ and call attention to

When all the instructions asked are set out in the transcript, an objection that the instructions asked were proper and were not covered by the court's charge to the jury is too general. The proper instructions said to have been asked and not substantially given should be specified by counsel. Boyd v. Oddous, 97 Cal. 510, 32 Pac. 569.

A statement in the brief of the appellant that the specifications in his statement sufficiently indicate the instructions objected to is insufficient where the instructions are numerous and voluminous. Tapscott v. Lyon, 103 Cal. 297, 37 Pac. 225.

the error caused by the refusal and the reasons why they should have been given.¹²

§ 422. Reference to Transcript.—In pointing out a ruling claimed to be erroneous, counsel in his brief should refer to the page of the transcript and folio where the ruling is to be found.¹³ If he does not see fit to do so, it will be assumed that he has not deemed the rulings of sufficient merit or importance to undertake the task. In any event, the appellate court will not assume the burden of discovering the ruling.¹⁴ This rule is applicable also to the respondent. And where he does not either orally or in his brief point out where in a voluminous record evidence may be found to sustain findings assailed as being without support, the appellate court will assume there is no such evidence.¹⁵

§ 423. Argument and Authority.—An appellate court cannot assume the task of discovering the error in a ruling,¹⁶ and it is the duty of counsel by argument and the citation of authority to show the reasons why the rulings complained of are erroneous.¹⁷ Contentions supported neither by argument nor by citation of authority are deemed to be without foundation,¹⁸ and to have been abandoned.¹⁹ Such contentions will not be considered by a reversal of a judgment or order because thereof should show wherein the error consists.² The appellate court can hardly be expected to prosecute an independent inquiry in order to find out reasons for or against the rulings of the trial court.³ Moreover, the citation of cases as authority without a personal knowledge of their pertinency is improper.⁴

§ 424. Scope of Reply Brief.—In fairness to the court and to counsel for the respondents, every point relied on for research should be stated and argued in the opening brief for the appellant, and should not be presented for the first time in the reply brief. Points so presented will be passed over by the courts as a general rule,⁵ unless good reason appears for the failure sooner to present them. However, a point may be made for the first time in the closing brief when made in response to a point in the brief of the respondent.⁶ And as the court is undoubtedly at liberty to decide a case upon any points that its proper disposition may seem to require, whether taken by counsel or not, an appellant, upon application showing meritorious reasons, may be allowed to discuss new points in his final brief. Such application may be based upon sickness, inadvertence or other excusable neglect.⁷ While an appellate court is not obliged to consider points made for the first time in a reply brief, it may nevertheless examine such points.⁸

§ 425. Brevity.—Brevity in the brief and argument of counsel is often commended.⁹ What the court needs for a proper consideration of a case is a clear, brief statement of the point made, with a citation of authorities bearing directly upon it. Long quotations from authorities are unnecessary, although quotations containing brief statements of the points relied upon are proper.¹⁰ While simplicity of statement in the brief of counsel has always been approved, the effort in this direction should not go so far as to eliminate or exclude all specification or mention of the errors relied upon for a reversal. The simplicity desired is that which avoids prolixity, verbosity and repetition; which omits theoretical disquisitions on abstract principles of law, needless presentation of questions of fact as to which the action of the trial court is final, the citation of innumerable authorities indicative of an examination of the subject which has never passed the digest stage, and the like. It must be assumed that the appellate court does not know the facts of the particular case or the special errors relied on for reversal, and these must be clearly pointed out, even at the hazard of encroaching upon an ideal simplicity of statement.¹¹ It has been said that no brief at all is worse than one too voluminous.¹²

§ 426. Scandal and Impertinence.—To file a brief upon appeal containing disrespectful and contemptuous references to and insinuations against the trial court, and the judge thereof, is not only a violation of the statute requiring attorneys “to maintain the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers,”¹³ but it is also a contempt of the appellate court,¹⁴ for which the brief may be stricken from the files.¹⁵ The party represented by counsel committing the offense ought not ordinarily to be deprived of any of his legal rights, however, and the appellate court may allow a proper brief to be filed,¹⁶ or reserve the power to examine the transcript to ascertain if errors occurred in the court below.¹⁷

§ 427. Miscellaneous Matters—Chain of title.—When a record contains many deeds and a case requires an examination of a chain of title, it is the duty of counsel to put an abstract or tabular statement of the chain of title in their briefs.¹⁸

Printing portions of record.—When the record is prepared pursuant to section 953a of the code, it is required that the parties in filing briefs print therein, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court. This rule is applicable both to appellants and respondents.¹⁹

Index to brief and table of cases.—Rule VIII of the supreme court provides for the alphabetical indexing of briefs.

“For any failure to observe this rule which is found to obstruct the examination of the record the court may, of its own motion, order the proper index to be supplied, or strike out the brief, or for failure of the appellant, dismiss the appeal.”²⁰

Admissions.—Admissions of counsel in his brief can be considered the same as an admission made in the trial of a cause. But all the terms of a stipulation must be considered. The court has no right to accept a part and reject a part.¹

III. SERVICE AND FILING.

§ 428. In General.—A party preparing a brief should file the same number of copies as are required for other papers.² He should serve a copy upon the adverse party,³ deposit a copy with the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken, for the judge who presided at the trial of the cause in the lower court,⁴ and file the original accompanied with the remaining copies within the time limited by the rules of the supreme court.⁵

§ 429. Time for Filing.—With respect to the time to file briefs, subdivision 4 of rule II of the supreme court provides as follows:

“Within thirty days after the filing of the transcript, the appellant shall file with the clerk his printed points and authorities, with proof of the service of one copy thereof upon the attorney or attorneys of each respondent who shall have appeared separately in the superior court.⁶ Within thirty days after the service of the appellant’s points and authorities, the respondent shall serve and file his printed points and authorities, and within twenty days after service of respondent’s points the appellant may serve and file a reply.”

Subdivision 2 of rule XII provides that:

“The time for filing points and authorities, in cases where the record is printed by the clerk, shall commence to run from the filing of the printed copy of the transcript.”

Computation of time.—If the last day in which to file a brief falls on a holiday, the party has to and including the following business day.⁷

§ 430. Effect of Noncompliance.—The effect of a non-compliance by an appellant with the rule prescribing the time for filing briefs is declared in rule V, which provides:

“If the . . . appellant’s points and authorities be not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal may be dismissed on motion, upon notice given. If . . . the points and authorities, though not filed within the time prescribed, be on file at the time such notice is given, that fact shall be sufficient to answer to the motion.”⁸

These rules as to time for filing briefs confer rights which may be enforced by litigants.⁹ A respondent has a right to have the appeal dismissed if the appellant’s brief is not filed within the time limited and before notice of motion to dismiss is given, and the appellate courts in a number of cases have dismissed appeals for default in this respect.¹⁰ The right of a respondent to a dismissal is controlled by the facts existing at the time the notice of motion is given. If there is no brief on file at that time the appeal will be dismissed, notwithstanding the subsequent filing of such brief.¹¹ If there is a brief on file at that time the respondent is not entitled to a dismissal,¹² or to an affirmance of the judgment without an examination of the merits, although it has been held in such case that the court, in its discretion, may refuse the appellant the privilege of making an oral argument.¹³ It has also been held that a brief filed after the expiration of the time limited without leave of court or consent of counsel may be allowed to remain as an argument on the merits only.¹⁴

Noncompliance by respondent.—As to the effect of non-compliance by the respondent, rule V of the supreme court provides that:

“If the respondent shall not file his points and authorities within the time allowed therefor, the cause may be submitted for decision upon the appellant’s brief.”

The appellant is not absolutely entitled under this rule to an immediate submission of the case for decision, but he is entitled to have the case placed upon the submission calendar, to be submitted in due course when the business of the court shall permit such submission.¹⁵

While the pendency of a motion to dismiss an appeal may be deemed a sufficient ground for extending the time for filing a brief, the pendency of such a motion cannot of itself excuse laches in filing a brief and prevent a dismissal on this ground. *Headstrom v. should be relieved from default. And it has been said that the courts in the determination of such motions should, as far as possible, lean toward a hearing of the case upon its merits.¹⁹

§ 432. Extension of Time.—Subdivision 5 of rule II of the supreme court provides for an extension of time in which to file briefs. This rule reads as follows:

“The time above limited for filing points and authorities shall not be extended except by order of the court upon stipulation of the parties, or an affidavit showing good cause therefor. No briefs shall be filed after oral argument except by special order.”

A party desiring to invoke this rule must bring himself within the terms upon which the favor is granted.²⁰ But as the appellant has the right to file his points and authorities until the respondent gives notice of a motion to dismiss, it has been held that an order extending time may be granted after the expiration of the time limited by the rule for the filing of the appellant's brief. Such an order has the effect of extending a right then existing, and cannot be said to revive one which has expired.¹

“The chief justice is authorized in the name of the supreme court upon stipulation or satisfactory showing by affidavit to make orders extending time for filing . . . briefs. . . . The presiding justices of the district courts of appeal shall have similar authority as to causes pending in their respective courts or divisions.”²

For the purpose of enabling the court to determine whether an order extending time should be granted, the applicant should show by the affidavit upon which he asks for the order, the date when the transcript was filed, and whether any time in addition to that limited by the rule of court has been given either by order or by stipulation, so that it can be determined therefrom whether it is within the discretion of the court to grant the time asked for.³ The court may revoke an inadvertent order made after the giving of notice to dismiss the appeal.⁴

By stipulation or death of party.—An oral statement of the respondent's attorney that he will not take advantage of appellant's failure to file a brief in time cannot operate to extend the time therefor beyond a reasonable time if it is effectual for such purpose at all.⁵ And under section 286 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the time in which to file a brief is not ipso facto extended by the death of the attorney of the adverse party.⁶

L. DISMISSAL, WITHDRAWAL OR ABANDONMENT.

I. GROUNDS FOR DISMISSAL.

§ 433. In General.—A motion to dismiss an appeal is a common remedy by which to challenge the jurisdiction of the appellate court, or to take advantage of some alleged failure of the appellant to comply with the statutes or the rules of court in taking and perfecting his appeal,⁷ such as serving notice, giving the undertaking,⁸ filing the transcript,⁹ and so forth. The appellate courts are not in-

might well have refused to dismiss the appeal there involved in the exercise of a wise discretion and thus reached the same result it did reach. But to hold that the death of the attorney extends the time is unwarranted).

clined to dismiss appeals upon grounds or for defects in procedure that are purely technical, when it is apparent that the appellant has complied with the substantial requirements for perfecting his appeal, and is prosecuting the same with diligence and in good faith.¹⁰ And a motion is not a proper remedy by which to have the merits of an appeal determined in advance of the hearing. If this is its effect, the motion will not be entertained.¹¹

Want of prosecution and abandonment.—An appeal will be dismissed for want of prosecution,¹² unless both parties are equally guilty of laches.¹³ So, also, an appeal will be dismissed where the circumstances warrant the conclusion that it has been abandoned,¹⁴ as where the appellant has failed to pursue the legal steps necessary to the preparation and filing of the record.¹⁵

Death of party.—An appeal taken in the name of a deceased party will be dismissed.¹⁶ So, also, except where the statute provides otherwise,¹⁷ an appeal will be dismissed where notice of appeal is given by¹⁸ or served upon¹⁹ an attorney of an adverse party after the death of his client. It is not a ground for denying the motion, that the personal representative of the decedent has not been substituted in the appellate court, as the court has no jurisdiction of the appeal.²⁰

Want of authority in attorney.—An appeal may be dismissed because taken by an attorney without authority to appeal. Since it will be presumed that an attorney signing a notice of appeal had authority to do so, an appeal will not be dismissed on motion of the respondent on the ground that it is prosecuted against the will of the appellant, unless the appellant himself objects; nor will the court in such case, pass upon the weight of conflicting affidavits to ascertain whether the appellant desires the appeal dismissed.¹ But an appeal cannot be dismissed on the ground that the attorney for appellant is not an attorney of record in the case, but is a member of a firm of attorneys who appeared as attorneys of record in the trial court.²

Defects in brief.—An appeal by the alternative method will not be dismissed because of a failure of the appellant to print in his brief such portions of the record as he desires to call to the attention of the court as required by the code.³

Other grounds.—Where two appeals are taken from the same judgment or order, the second will be dismissed if no question as to the validity of the first is raised,⁴ or where a dismissal of a prior appeal from the same order operated as an affirmance.⁵ So, also, an appeal from a decree in a proceeding in the nature of a bill of review which presents the same questions as must be presented on a pending appeal from the judgment will be dismissed.⁶

§ 434. Want of Jurisdiction.—Since, as has been seen, appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court and district court of appeal over judgments of the superior court include those in which that court has improperly assumed jurisdiction,⁷ an appeal will not be dismissed upon the ground that the superior court had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings, when it has assumed such jurisdiction and rendered an affirmative judgment therein.⁸ If a cause is not within the jurisdiction of an appellate court, an appeal will be dismissed on motion of the respondent,⁹ or, in the absence thereof, by the court upon its own motion.¹⁰ An appeal, therefore, will be dismissed where the amount in controversy is less than the jurisdictional limits of an appellate court,¹¹ or where the judgment appealed from was rendered by a superior court upon appeal from a justice's court.¹² If, however, a case is within the jurisdiction of an appellate court, either the supreme court or a district court of appeal, no right of an appellant is affected because he may have taken his appeal to the wrong court, as the constitution specifically provides that an appeal shall not be dismissed for this reason.¹³ In such case it is the rule that the cause shall be transferred to the proper court upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be just, and shall be proceeded with therein as if regularly appealed thereto.¹⁴ And even where, by reason of a mistake in entitling the appeal, it has found its way to the calendar of the court, it will not be dismissed. In this event, the cause may be stricken from the calendar or ordered transferred. The latter method is preferable as avoiding extra trouble and expense in making application to the proper court for an order requiring a transfer to it of the record.¹⁵

§ 435. Want of Right to Appeal.—Unless a decision of the motion involves the merits of the case,¹⁶ an appeal will be dismissed on motion made before a hearing on the merits, where the appellant has not the requisite interest, or is not an aggrieved party,¹⁷ or where he has waived his right to appeal, by consenting to the judgment or order appealed from,¹⁸ by accepting the benefits of the judgment appealed from,¹⁹ or by entering into a stipulation, founded upon a sufficient consideration, waiving his right to appeal.²⁰ The court will not only dismiss an appeal where the appellant had no interest in the subject matter at the time of taking the appeal, but also where the interest of the appellant, though sufficient at the time of the taking of the appeal, has terminated pending the appeal. In principle, it matters not whether the relinquishment of the claim be voluntary, as by purchase, abandonment or compromise, or involuntary, as by judicial decree. In both cases the interest of the appellant in the controversy has come to an end, and the decision on the appeal cannot affect the result as to the thing in issue in the case before the court¹.

It has been contended that the rule requiring a dismissal of appeals from consent orders is subject to two exceptions, the first being in cases where the lower court did not have jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, and the second in cases where the complaint is fatally defective. Whether the rule is subject to these exceptions is an open question in this state.²

§ 436. Frivolous and Sham Appeals.—While a good reason for a speedy submission and decision of an appeal, it is no ground for dismissal, that an appeal is without merit, or that it is sham and frivolous,³ or that it was taken for delay.⁴ To determine that an appeal is frivolous and groundless involves a consideration of the merits of the appeal.⁵ Hence, a motion to dismiss upon this ground is in substance a motion to advance the cause for hearing prior to its being reached in its regular order on the calendar, and to permit such a procedure would be practically to dispense with the regular calendar of causes.⁶ Moreover, an appeal is a matter of right and cannot be defeated because the appeal may be groundless. The remedy of the respondent in such cases is by an award of damages by the appellate court under the statute.⁷

dismissed when the judgment has been satisfied.¹⁵ And the same course will be followed where the parties have compromised and settled their controversy out of court,¹⁶ unless the respondent's counsel holds an assignment of an interest in the judgment and the compromise is made without his consent and after notice to the appellant of such assignment.¹⁷

judgment or order which is not directly appealable confers no jurisdiction upon an appellate court, and will be dismissed on motion of the respondent,² or, in the absence thereof, by the court upon its own motion.³ Where an appeal is not given by statute, it is not sufficient answer to a motion to dismiss that the lower court had no authority to make the order appealed from.⁴ If a motion for dismissal on this ground involves a consideration of the case upon its merits, the motion will be denied without prejudice or continued until the hearing of the appeal upon its merits.⁵ Thus, where on a motion to dismiss an appeal from an order refusing to vacate an appealable judgment it is necessary to examine the record to determine whether the grounds relied upon for the appeal from the order are available on the appeal from the judgment, the appeal will not be dismissed.⁶ When two appeals are taken in a case, one from a judgment and one from an order, one may be dismissed and the other allowed to remain.⁷

§ 439. Defects in Proceedings in Trial Court.—Matters occurring prior to the order appealed from cannot be considered on a motion to dismiss an appeal,⁸ for the reason that this would involve an examination of the action of the court below, and a determination of the merits of the appeal prior to the hearing.⁹ In other words, if an appeal has been properly taken from an order subject to be reviewed by an appellate court, it cannot be dismissed upon the ground that the court below improperly made the order.¹⁰ By this rule an appeal from an order denying a new trial, assuming such order to be appealable,¹¹ will not be dismissed because of irregularities in the proceedings prior to the order on new trial,¹² such as a failure to serve and file a notice of intention to move for a new trial in proper time,¹³ or the premature service of such notice,¹⁴ or the failure to serve such notice on all the adverse parties,¹⁵ or to serve it at all.¹⁶ Neither will such an appeal be dismissed because of the insufficiency of the notice of motion,¹⁷ or a failure to serve a bill of exceptions in time,¹⁸ or upon an adverse party.¹⁹ Such matters do not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction. They may constitute good reason for denying the motion and for affirmance of the order of denial, but they are not grounds for dismissal.²⁰

ings taken to perfect an appeal were ineffectual to confer jurisdiction upon the appellate court, as to whether the appeal should be dismissed or simply ignored as having no legal existence. This was particularly true in case of a failure to file an undertaking in time, as the statute expressly declared that in that event the appeal was ineffectual for any purpose.¹ Inasmuch, however, as the face of the records of the case in the superior court show that an appeal has been taken, notwithstanding the proceedings are ineffectual to transfer jurisdiction, the present practice is to grant a dismissal for the purpose of removing such apparent appeal from the records.²

filed before the notice of appeal was served.¹¹ The fact that the sureties fail to justify upon an appeal bond is not ground for dismissal of an appeal.¹² Nor is it a ground for dismissal that an attorney of the appellant became a surety upon the undertaking on appeal in violation of a rule of the superior court. This is a matter cognizable before the superior court, to be dealt with as it shall be advised.¹³

§ 441. Failure to File Transcript or Brief in Time.—Rule V of the supreme court provides that if the transcript of the record or appellant's points and authorities be not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal may be dismissed on motion on notice given.¹⁴ In the case of a failure to file a transcript, the respondent is only required to show in the first instance that more than forty days have expired since the perfecting of the appeal, and in the absence of any further showing on the part of the appellant, the appeal will be dismissed. The burden is then upon the appellant to show that he is within some exception; for example, that a bill of exceptions has been settled and that forty days have not elapsed since its settlement, or that proceedings for its settlement are still pending.¹⁵

While the pendency of proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions prevents the running of the time for filing the transcript, such proceedings must be actually pending, undisposed of and not abandoned. If such proceedings are abandoned, the appeal may be dismissed. See infra, § 442.

If the transcript or points and authorities, though not filed within the time prescribed, be on file at the time such notice is given, that fact will be sufficient to answer to the motion. In such case the mere filing of the transcript or points and authorities is sufficient of itself to defeat the motion.¹⁶ But if they are not filed until after notice given, something more is required to avoid a dismissal.¹⁷ In such case, the appellant may at the time the motion to dismiss is made¹⁸ show by affidavit, facts by way of excuse for his default, and if the appellate court deems the facts sufficient to call for a relaxation of the rule, it will not dismiss the appeal.¹⁹ The nature of the circumstances which have been held sufficient to justify a relaxing of the rule is indicated by the parenthetical statements following the citations in the note below.²⁰ It has been held, the time in which to file a transcript cannot be attacked on motion to dismiss,³ and an appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that an appellant did not give the true reason for the delay, where it appears that good reason for the extension exists.⁴

§ 442. Defects or Omissions in Proceedings to Prepare Record.—An appellate court will not ordinarily undertake to determine on a motion to dismiss an appeal whether a party has failed to comply with the requirements of the law in regard to the settlement of a bill of exceptions,⁵ or is guilty of laches in having a bill of exceptions settled.⁶ This is a matter primarily for the trial court before whom the proceedings are pending. But when it is clear that the bill can never be settled, and that the appellant has abandoned the proceedings therefor, a motion in the appellate court to dismiss the appeal is proper,⁷ as such neglect for a period of time to have the bill settled is equivalent to a failure to file the transcript within the time limited.⁸ It is better practice, however, for the respondent to avail himself of the objection in the trial court.⁹

§ 443. Failure to Furnish Requisite Papers.—Section 954 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes a dismissal of an appeal where the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers.¹⁰ While an appeal will not be dismissed when the missing portions of the judgment-roll are not requisite to a full determination of the cause,¹¹ an appeal may be dismissed under section 954 unless the appellant furnish at the hearing copies of essential papers.¹² So, also, it has been held that an appeal from an order of the superior court will be dismissed if the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion are not authenticated by incorporating them in a bill of exceptions or other method provided by law as required by rule XXIX of the supreme court.¹³ Inasmuch, however, as the appellate court has jurisdiction of an appeal notwithstanding infirmities in the transcript, the proper procedure, when the record is wholly insufficient as a basis on which to review the judgment or order appealed from, is not to dismiss the appeal but to affirm the judgment or order.¹⁴ And so, where an appellant has not perfected his appeal by any method, the procedure is to move for an affirmance of the judgment for lack of a record.¹⁵ As stated in substance in a comparatively recent case, the lack of a bill of exceptions on an appeal from an order of a superior court is rather a ground for an affirmance than a dismissal, where, as is usually the case, there is, in the absence of such bill, nothing in the record upon which the action of the court can be properly reviewed, though the court has sometimes granted such a motion, when it was very apparent that the record was insufficient.¹⁶

II. PROCEEDINGS AND EFFECTS THEREOF.

§ 444. In General.—A dismissal of an appeal may be involuntary upon the motion of the respondent or of the appellate court, or it may be voluntary upon the application of the appellant,¹⁷ or upon the stipulation of the parties.¹⁸

Dismissal of appeal on stipulation.—Rule XXIV of the supreme court, relating to the dismissal of appeals by stipulation, provides as follows:

“An appeal may be dismissed by the court at any time, upon and in accordance with the written stipulation of the attorneys of record of the respective parties. Where there is no transcript on file, such stipulation shall be accompanied by a certificate of the clerk of the court below, showing the names of the attorneys of the respective parties, the character of the action, including the relief asked by the complaint, and the date and character of the judgment appealed from, and the fact and date of the filing of the notice of appeal.”¹⁹

The parties to an appeal cannot by consent dismiss an appeal and at the same time let it stand as to matters merely incidental to the appeal.²⁰

§ 445. Who may Make Motion—Respondent.—An appeal may be dismissed in a proper case upon motion of a respondent, who has not waived the objection complained of or is not for some reason estopped from pressing his motion.¹ An objection that notice of appeal was not served upon all the adverse parties may be made by a respondent who was served, although he can suffer no injury from the appellant's failure to serve other parties;² or it may be made by an adverse party who was not served and who is not a party to the record. The objection goes to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the appeal, and it would seem to be immaterial in what manner comes the suggestion that the steps necessary to confer jurisdiction have not been taken. Moreover, to hold that only the party receiving notice of appeal may make the motion would place with an appellant, in any case where there are several parties adverse to him, the power to select his opponents on appeal.³ Where the defect complained of is jurisdictional, it is no ground for denying a motion to dismiss that it is not made on behalf of someone interested in upholding the judgment, for the court in such case will dismiss the appeal upon its own motion whenever its attention is drawn to the defect.⁴

Appellant.—An appeal may be dismissed upon the request or motion of the appellant.⁵ In the absence of any objection by the attorney general, an appeal by a county from a judgment rendered against it will be dismissed on a motion made by the district attorney of the county, in pursuance of a resolution of its board of supervisors, although an attorney claiming to act as special counsel for

This was an action to foreclose a mortgage upon the separate property of a married woman in which the court decreed the surplus, after discharging the mortgage, be paid to her as her separate property. The husband, claiming the land was not all separate property, moved for a new trial and appealed from the order thereon and the judgment without serving the wife with notice of motion for new trial or notice of appeal. It was held that the wife was a stranger to the record and that a motion to dismiss the appeal made on her behalf would not be entertained.

4. Pedlar v. Stroud, 116 Cal. 461, 48 Pac. 371 (holding on a motion to dismiss upon the ground that the notice of appeal was served upon the attorney after the death of the respondent, that it is not a ground for denying the motion that there has been no substitution of the personal representative of the decedent and that the motion does not purport to be made on behalf of anyone interested in the judgment).

5. An appeal will be dismissed where the appellant files a written instrument withdrawing his appeal and asking the court to dismiss it with costs. Estate of Wells, 148 Cal. 659, 84 Pac. 37.

Upon a motion of the appellant to dismiss his appeal upon the ground that the judgment has been satisfied, the question cannot be determined whether the judgment was satisfied in fraud of the rights of assignees of the respondent. The dismissal will simply affirm the judgment and leave the rights of the parties to the determination of the superior court. Nunan v. Valentine, 83 Cal. 588, 23 Pac. 713.

the appellant opposes the motion.⁶ While the orderly and courteous method of an appellant desiring to dismiss his appeal is to give notice to his attorney, or, in the event of his refusal, after notice, to procure a substitution of attorneys and through the new attorney bring the matter to the attention of the court, he is not deprived of his right to a dismissal because the motion is made by the respondent upon his affidavit, if the attorney taking the appeal has no special contract or charge upon the property in controversy.⁷

Court.—An appellate court will dismiss an appeal upon its own motion where for any reason it has no jurisdiction to entertain it.⁸

§ 446. Estoppel and Waiver.—Unless the objection be jurisdictional, a respondent may be precluded from moving for a dismissal of an appeal because of a waiver of the defect complained of, or because of an estoppel to raise the objection.⁹ Where, before the expiration of the time in which to appeal, the respondent enters into a stipu-

See supra, § 65); Estate of More, 143 Cal. 493, 77 Pac. 407 (holding that by acknowledging service of a notice of appeal the respondent is not estopped from insisting that the appeal was taken prematurely before entry of the order, because it is stated in the notice that the order was entered); *Gardner v. lation that a proper undertaking on appeal has been filed, he will not, after the time for appealing has elapsed, be allowed to contradict his former admission and ask for a dismissal on the ground that the undertaking filed was insufficient.¹⁰ Such stipulation, however, is limited in its effect to the undertaking, and cannot estop a respondent from moving to dismiss upon other grounds; for instance, upon the ground that the appeal was not taken in time.¹¹ Repeated refusals to acknowledge satisfaction of a judgment estop a respondent from moving to dismiss on the ground that the judgment has been satisfied, as he cannot for one purpose refuse to acknowledge satisfaction of the judgment, and for another insist that it is satisfied.¹² But an objection that a respondent is estopped by his acts from pressing a motion to dismiss cannot avail an appellant, when the defect goes to the jurisdiction of the appellate court to entertain the appeal. In such case, upon the fact appearing, the appeal will be dismissed by the court upon its own motion.¹³ And grounds for dismissal which go to the jurisdiction of the appellate court are not waived by a failure to state them in the notice of motion. They may be raised for the first time in the brief of the respondent.¹⁴

It is pointed out in an earlier article that a conflict exists in the decisions as to the right of a personal representative—substituted in the trial court, but not in the appellate court—to move the dismissal of an appeal against a deceased respondent for failure to file the transcript in time.¹⁸

A motion to dismiss an appeal should be made upon the day noticed for the hearing, or at the first opportunity during the session of the court. If not so made, the motion lapses, and it cannot be revived at a subsequent session.¹⁹

Where made.—A motion to dismiss an appeal can be made only in the court to which an appeal is taken.²⁰ The taking of an appeal deprives a trial court of jurisdiction of matters embraced in the appeal,¹ and hence, it has no jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal.²

appellant may not be taken by surprise, and may have an opportunity to meet the motion. While under the earlier practice an appellant was entitled to five days' notice of motion to dismiss an appeal,³ under the present rules it is required that the notice shall be ten days, unless for good cause shown the time is shortened by the court.^{3a}

Requisites and sufficiency.—Section 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring notices of motion to state the grounds upon which it will be made is applicable to notices of motion to dismiss appeals.⁴ When the objection is one which may be obviated by the appellant, it is necessary to specify in the notice of motion the ground upon which the dismissal will be asked;⁵ and the notice will be strictly construed against any attempt to mislead an opponent or to ambush an attack which with timely notice could be guarded against.⁶ When, however, the objection is one which goes to the jurisdiction of the appellate court to entertain the appeal, it may be advanced, although not specified in the notice of motion.⁷

When the motion is made on the ground that the appellant has failed to furnish the requisite papers, the notice must designate or point out what papers requisite to a consideration of the appeal are omitted from the record.⁸ Where the attack is upon the undertaking, the notice should point out the defects therein,⁹ unless the defect is incurable and goes to the jurisdiction of the appellate court. In the latter case it is sufficient to state generally that no valid or sufficient undertaking on appeal has been given or filed by said defendant on said appeal.¹⁰ A notice sufficiently indicates the ground upon which the motion will be made, where the notice is based upon the usual clerk's certificate and an affidavit showing that no transcript has been served upon the respondent.¹¹ Where several appeals have been taken in a cause, the motion must be certain as to which appeal it attacks.¹² But clerical errors in the notice of motion will not vitiate it.¹³

§ 449. Certificate and Affidavits.—A motion to dismiss an appeal for a failure to file the transcript within the prescribed time is made upon the certificate of the clerk of the lower court provided for in subdivision 1 of rule VI of the supreme court.¹⁴ On motion to dismiss the appeal on any other ground, the moving papers consist of such certificate of the clerk or of affidavits, or both such certificate and affidavits.¹⁵ Copies of the moving papers, except the transcript, are required to be served with the notice of motion.¹⁶

Additional certificates and affidavits.—The certificate is merely evidence of certain facts which the respondent is required to present on the hearing of the motion, and there is no reason why an amended certificate should not be considered if it is material. A respondent's request to file an additional certificate before the motion is heard is not an abandonment of his right to be heard on the original certificate, but merely an offer to produce additional evidence to overcome the appellant's objections.¹⁹ An application to file additional affidavits made after the hearing of the motion to dismiss may be denied.²⁰

be evasive. But on motion to dismiss an appeal from a decree of distribution on the ground that the appellant consented thereto and accepted the benefits thereunder, affidavits impeaching the decree upon grounds not appearing of record cannot be considered while the decree remains as the judgment of the court. Imposition of damages.—On a motion to dismiss, the appellate court will not look into the record to see if the appeal be frivolous and the case a proper one for the imposition of damages.³ But where the uncontradicted affidavit of the respondent shows that the appeal was taken solely for delay, and that the right of appeal has been abused, the court may award damages on the dismissal thereof.⁴ When the appellant does not appear in opposition to the motion, it must be assumed that a statement of the respondent as to the purpose of the appeal is correct.⁵ However, a mere ex parte affidavit to the effect that the respondent has been informed and believes an appeal to be without merit does not authorize a conclusion that the appeal is frivolous, nor justify an imposition of damages.⁶

§ 451. Determination of Merits.—It is a rule of convenience for the expedition of business of the appellate court that it will not entertain a motion to dismiss involving an examination of the record in advance of the hearing on the merits.⁷ If the questions involved in a motion involve the merits of a case and are such as should be determined upon the hearing of the case upon its merits, the court may deny the motion with the privilege of renewal at the hearing, or continue the motion until the hearing on the merits.⁸ Since the rule is merely one of convenience, the appellate court may, however, depart therefrom and consider the questions presented, when the mere inspection of the record discloses that no relief can be given the appellant.⁹

The rule against entertaining motions to dismiss which involve the merits does not, as a rule, preclude an appellate court from entertaining a motion made upon the ground that the order appealed from is not an appealable one. While a determination of this question involves a comparison of the record containing the order appealed from with the statute prescribing what orders are appealable,¹⁰ ordinarily it is only the order itself and the pleadings which need be considered in disposing of the motion in such case.¹¹

§ 452. Avoiding Dismissal Where Transcript or Brief is not Filed in Time.—Rule V of the supreme court, after providing that a failure to file the transcript of the record or appellant's points and authorities within the time limited is ground for dismissal, provides further that if the transcript, or points and authorities, though not filed within the time prescribed, be on file at the time notice of motion to dismiss is given, that fact shall be sufficient to answer to the motion.¹² Under this rule the right of a respondent to a dismissal is determined by the facts as they exist at the time the notice of motion is given. If there is a transcript or brief on file at that time, this fact of itself prevents a dismissal of the appeal under rule V.¹³ If no transcript or brief is on file at the time the notice is given, and no extension of time is applied for or granted, the right of the respondent to a dismissal is not defeated by the mere filing of a transcript or brief subsequently thereto.¹⁴ To avoid a dismissal in such case, the appel-scribed time, the giving of leave to file a transcript after the expiration of the twenty days is not equivalent to an extension of time, and an appeal will be dismissed notwithstanding a transcript is filed pursuant to such leave, after the giving of notice of motion to dismiss, but before the hearing thereon); *Welch v. These cases are based upon authorities citing rule XV of the supreme court, which authorizes the correction of "defects in the transcript" prior to the hearing of the motion, and cases decided thereunder, and erroneously, it is believed, extend this rule to a "failure to file" a transcript. The rule as announced by the supreme court is stated in the text.

The fact that the document is in the office of an express company in transit to the clerk for filing when the notice of motion to dismiss is given does not save the appellant's rights, as this is not the equivalent of filing, within the rule, but it is a circumstance to be taken into consideration in relaxing the rule. *Ward v. some controversy between the parties as to which act was prior in point of time, the appellate court will not look into fractions of a day for the purpose of dismissing the appeal.¹⁹

Effect of amendment of motion.—When a motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment is amended so as to include an appeal from an order denying a new trial, the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order cannot be regarded as having been made until notice is given of the amendment to the motion, and if the transcript is filed on that day, and the respondent does not show that his notice was given prior to its filing, it is a sufficient answer to the latter motion.²⁰

Effect of defects in transcript or brief filed.—To avoid a dismissal under this rule it is not necessary that the transcript or brief be perfect and unobjectionable. A transcript which purports to contain a record of all the proceedings which is sought to be reviewed on the appeal is sufficient to avoid a dismissal, although it may contain defects which are curable under rule XIV by a suggestion of a diminution of the record.¹ So, also, a court will not examine a document purporting to be the points and authorities of the appellant to determine its sufficiency to avoid a dismissal. Where there are two appeals taken in an action, the court will not even examine the document to ascertain if it is applicable to both.²

is to be construed in connection with rules XIV and XV of the supreme court authorizing the correction of any error or defect in the transcript by producing a certified copy of the omitted record, and providing that objections to the right of an appellant to be heard or any exception to the sufficiency of the transcript which might be cured upon the suggestion of a diminution of the record shall not prevail unless the appellant shall fail to file such additional record after having been notified as therein provided. Thus construed, section 954 does not give the respondent absolute right to a dismissal of an appeal upon a mere showing that the record as filed is defective, but only authorizes a dismissal if the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers after the suggestion of diminution has been made.³ If the appellant, at the hearing of the cause produces a properly authenticated transcript, the objection is obviated, and the motion to dismiss will be denied.⁴ The respondent cannot avoid the application of this rule and require an immediate dismissal by making an affidavit that the defect complained of cannot be cured by a suggestion of diminution of the record.⁵ The avoidance of a dismissal where the undertaking on appeal is defective has already been discussed.⁶

§ 454. Effect of Determination—Successive Motions.—

A dismissal of an appeal removes the cause from the jurisdiction of the appellate court. Briefs filed cease to be records after the dismissal,⁷ and all orders made in the cause by the appellate court fall with the dismissal of an appeal for want of a case to support them.⁸ Section 955 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that

“The dismissal of an appeal is in effect an affirmance of the judgment or order appealed from, unless the dismissal is expressly made without prejudice to another appeal.”⁹

A dismissal not stated to be without prejudice operates as an affirmance where the dismissal is for want of prosecution,¹⁰ by consent,¹¹ and probably where the dismissal is made upon the ground of noncompliance with the statute regulating the taking of appeals.¹² But it has been held that a dismissal of an appeal does not operate as an affirmance where the dismissal is made upon the ground that the appeal was prematurely taken.¹³ A dismissal leaves the judgment appealed from as originally pronounced.¹⁴ At most, it prevents a second appeal,¹⁵ and relieves the order or judgment from attack for error or irregularity which could have been taken advantage of upon appeal. It cannot, however, impart validity to a judgment which is void upon its face.¹⁶

Successive motions.—While the court may upon a proper state of facts allow a renewal of a motion to dismiss once decided,¹⁷ in the absence of such leave a renewal of the motion upon the same facts at the hearing of the appeal on the merits has nothing to commend it to the discretion of the appellate court.¹⁸ And where the motion is refused in whole or in part, or is granted conditionally, section 182 of the Code of Civil Procedure precludes a renewal of the motion before the same court.¹⁹

§ 455. Vacation and Reinstatement.—Formerly, the rules of the supreme court authorized the reinstatement, for good cause shown, on notice to the opposite party, of appeals dismissed on ex parte motion on the ground that the transcript of the record was not filed within the time prescribed.²⁰ On motions of this character it was required that the appellant show by affidavit, not only that there has been no want of diligence on his part in prosecuting the appeal, and that, in the opinion of counsel at least, there are substantial errors in the record which ought to be corrected by the court,¹ but also that the appeal has been taken in good faith.² If no such motion was made, the dismissal became final.³

M. CALENDARS, HEARING AND REHEARING.

I. CALENDARS.

§ 456. In General.—Rule IV of the supreme court provides (in part) as follows:

“Thirty days before the commencement of a regular session a calendar therefor, including such pending cases as the court deems it expedient to place thereon, shall be prepared. Unless specially advanced by law or order of the court, cases shall be placed thereon in the order in which transcripts were filed, provided that the appellant’s opening points and authorities are on file.”⁵

Rule XVII provides:

“Criminal causes shall be placed at the head of the calendar, and shall be followed by such other cases as are preferred by law. Other causes shall be arranged on the calendar of the respective courts, as the chief justice of the supreme court, or the presiding justice of the district court of appeal, or the division thereof in which the cause is pending, respectively, may direct.”⁶

Section 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

“Appeals in probate proceedings and contested election cases shall be given preference in hearing in the supreme court, and be placed on the calendar in the order of their date of issue, next after cases in which people of the state are parties.”

5. See Himmelman v. Haskell, 45 Cal. 269, as to showing required of party moving under rule XV of rules of 1870 (37 Cal. 709) to place cause on calendar for default of adverse party as to briefs.

6. Rule XVII. See supreme court rule XXXVII, as to order of hearing in appellate courts.

It has been held that to prevent the suspension of the payment of alimony for a long time, an appeal from an order allowing it will be placed on the next court calendar made up after the filing of the transcript.⁷

The clerk is not authorized, in the absence of a special order to that effect, to place a case upon the calendar for oral argument until points and authorities have been filed.⁸ Until that time the respondent has a right to assume that the case will not be on the calendar for argument. If placed on the calendar in violation of this rule, the court will set aside any order of submission and strike the case from the oral argument calendar.⁹

A motion to place a cause on the calendar may be denied if the order appealed from is not an appealable order.¹⁰

Cause placed on wrong calendar.—While counsel may not be entitled to any specific notice that a case is set upon one of the calendars of the supreme court for hearing, they are entitled to assume that it will be placed upon the calendar for the proper district. If through a mistake of the clerk the cause is placed on the calendar of a wrong district and is argued in the absence of a party who had no notice of the setting of the case, the hearing and submission are irregular and will be set aside on motion of such party.¹¹ Causes improperly upon the calendar will be stricken therefrom.¹²

§ 457. Changing Place of Cause on Calendar.—An appellate court has power over its calendars and the power in a proper case to change the position of a cause thereupon.¹³ But it will not exercise its power in this respect, either upon the stipulation of the parties or upon motion of either party, except upon a showing of good cause therefor.¹⁴ A motion to affirm a judgment on the ground that an appeal therefrom is without merit is in substance only a motion to advance the cause for hearing prior to its being reached in its order upon the calendar. To permit such a motion when there is in fact no good reason for such advancement would be unfair to other litigants whose appeals are entitled to priority in the matter of hearing.¹⁵ The fact that an appeal was taken for delay is not ground for advancing the hearing of the cause.¹⁶

II. HEARING.

§ 458. Consolidation of Causes.—The supreme court will not consolidate suits brought upon distinct causes of action, especially when, by so doing, facts are incorporated in a cause which do not appear in the record and which were not in issue or established in the cause while in the court below.¹⁷ The fact that causes were consolidated by preme court, and the transcript contains nothing to show that an appeal has been taken, any order submitting the cause will be set aside and the case stricken from the calendar. Sweet v. Tice, 45 Cal. 71.

order of a trial court upon consent of the parties will not entitle them to be considered together upon appeal, if there are separate motions for new trial upon grounds peculiar to the respective cases, separate bills of exceptions and separate appeals.¹⁸

§ 459. Argument.—Rule XIX of the supreme court provides as follows:

“No more than one counsel upon a side will be heard upon the oral argument, except when otherwise ordered; but each defendant, or intervener, who appeared separately in the court below may be heard through his own counsel, unless the court otherwise order. The counsel for each party shall be allowed only one hour, unless an extension of time is ordered before the argument begins.”

Assignments not pressed at the oral argument do not require special notice.¹⁹ And points raised for the first time on oral argument will not be considered.²⁰

Waiver of argument.—When a cause is regularly placed on the calendar, and the parties fail to appear at the time fixed for argument, either in person or by attorney, they are deemed to have waived oral argument, and it is the practice to order the cause to be submitted on the briefs on file. A party who files a brief in support of his appeal, and accepts service of the respondent's reply brief, and who thereby appears in person, is assumed to know of the regular placing of the cause on the argument calendar and of the time fixed for argument, and is thereafter precluded from afterwards urging that the privilege of oral argument was denied him, and that there was no hearing of the cause.¹

It is provided in subdivision 2 of rule XXX of the supreme court that

“The submission of a cause to a department of the supreme court without oral argument shall be deemed to be a waiver of an oral argument of the same in bank, if for any reason the same is thereafter ordered to be heard in bank; and when the order that the cause be heard in bank is made, the same shall be at once submitted for decision, unless otherwise ordered by the court.”

§ 460. Judicial Notice by Appellate Courts.—An appellate court can properly take judicial notice of any matter of which a court of original jurisdiction may properly take notice. In fact, a particularly salutary use of the principle of judicial notice is to sustain on appeal a judgment clearly in favor of the right party, but as to which there is in the evidence an omission of necessary fact which is yet indisputable and a matter of common knowledge, and probably assumed without strict proof for that very reason.²

As to laws and matters dependent thereon.—An appellate court is bound to take judicial notice of the constitution and laws of the state.³ It takes judicial notice of federal statutes and also of a state statute relating to a particular county.⁴

An appellate court will take judicial notice of the regular terms of the district courts as fixed by statute and of the contiguity of the counties composing the districts. Boggs v. Clark, 37 Cal. 236. See infra, § 461; as to judicial notice of court officers and judicial proceedings.

Of other matters.—The appellate court can take judicial notice that the United States is at war, when such is the fact.⁵ And as a matter of public knowledge, it may take notice that the erection of hotels, restaurants, museums, art galleries, zoological and botanical gardens, conservatories and the like in public parks is common.⁶

An appellate court cannot judicially know that there is a regular communication by mail between the place of residence of the person who made service of the notice of appeal and the person served.⁷ It cannot take judicial notice that any particular land was a part of the public domain at a specified date.⁸ Neither can it take judicial notice that the climate of a particular place is at all times dangerous to one afflicted with chronic bronchitis, simply because it is dangerous at one season of the year.⁹

§ 461. As to State Officers and Judicial Proceedings.—An appellate court will take judicial notice as to who are the judges of the superior courts of the state, as section 1875 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires courts to take judicial notice of “the accession to office and the official signatures and seals of the principal officers of government in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of this state and of the United States.”¹⁰ That a superior judge is a principal officer of the judicial department of the state cannot be doubted, and as such judicial notice must be taken of the accession to office of a superior judge¹¹ as well as of his retirement from office.¹² The authority of the attorney general is derived from the constitution and laws of the state, and the appellate court is bound to take judicial notice of the extent of and the limitations upon his powers.¹³ And an appellate court will take judicial notice of the fact that the county clerk is ex-officio clerk of the superior court, because it is so provided in the state constitution.¹⁴

Judicial proceedings.—When necessary for the administration of justice in a particular case, the court will take judicial notice of all previous and undisputed proceedings therein as appear of record certified or authenticated as required by law, and required by law to be on file or of record in the cause.¹⁵ But, as a general rule, the court will not in one case take judicial notice of the record or proceedings in another case in the same court, unless there is in the record of the case before it some suggestion of such record or proceedings. This rule, however, is not an inflexible one, and should not be applied so as to prevent an appellate court from taking judicial notice in a pending appeal of its action in another case intimately connected with it and occurring subsequent to the taking of such appeal when it is evident that unless such notice is taken and acted upon injustice to the appellant will result.¹⁶ Thus, upon an appeal from a judgment in a creditor's action, the court will take judicial notice of the reversal of the original judgment upon which the creditor's action is based.¹⁷ So, also, upon an appeal from a judgment in an action in which the pendency of another action is pleaded, the appellate court may judicially notice the dismissal of an appeal in such other action for the purpose of determining whether the judgment in the case before it should be reversed, affirmed or modified.¹⁸

While an appellate court will take judicial notice of its own records for some purpose, an appellant cannot in this way have his cause heard upon evidence not produced at the hearing below.¹⁹ And on appeal from an order denying a change of venue, the appellate court cannot take judicial notice of the fact that the amount of damages claimed is greater than is likely to be allowed by a jury, or that the defendant will put in issue the amount of damages claimed, so as to justify the affidavit of merits.²⁰

III. REHEARING.

Rehearing in Court Deciding Case.

§ 462. Nature of Rehearing and Power to Grant.—A petition for rehearing is a request to an appellate court to revise its action by correcting errors and modifying or setting aside its decision.¹ As stated in a comparatively recent case: "Petitions for rehearing are permitted by the rules of the court, for the purpose of correcting any error which the court may have made in its opinion, or of enabling counsel to direct the attention of the court to matters presented at the argument, which may have been overlooked in the decision.'"²

Power to grant.—The constitution and the Code of Civil Procedure authorize the chief justice of the supreme court, with the concurrence of two associate justices or any four justices, to order a rehearing of a case in bank, within thirty days after judgment pronounced in department.³ While the constitution expressly makes provision for a rehearing in bank after a decision in department, neither it nor the statute confers power upon the supreme court to direct a rehearing of causes decided in bank without a previous decision in department. But notwithstanding this fact, it is well settled that it has authority to grant a rehearing in such cases by virtue of its inherent power to modify and correct its judgments so long as they are under its control.⁴ The power to grant rehearings was repeatedly exercised under the constitution of 1849,

2. San Francisco v. Pacific Bank, 89 Cal. 23, 26 Pac. 835.

3. Const., art. VI, § 2; Code Civ. Proc., § 44.

The constitutional provision is as follows: "The chief justice [of the supreme court] shall apportion the business to the departments and may, in his discretion, order any cause pending before the court to be heard and decided by the court in bank. The order may be made before or after judgment pronounced by a department; but where a cause has been allotted to one of the departments, and a judgment pronounced thereon, the order must be made within thirty days after such judgment, and concurred in by two associate justices, and if so made, it shall have the effect to vacate and set aside the judgment. Any four justices may, either before or after judgment by a department, order a cause to be heard in bank. If the order be not made within the time above limited, the judgment shall be final. No judgment by a department shall become final until the expiration of the period of thirty days aforesaid, unless approved by the chief justice, in writing, with the concurrence of two associate justices." and under the revisal of the article on the judicial department therein as effected by the amendment of 1862-63, both of which were silent upon the subject;⁵ and it is well settled that this power exists under the constitution of 1879, although it does not mention rehearings of causes decided in bank without a previous decision in department. The power is not impliedly denied by the provision already referred to authorizing a rehearing in bank of cases decided in department, as this provision was necessary to define clearly the relations of the departments to the court.⁶ It is true that it has been held that the right to petition for a rehearing should not be recognized in cases decided in department and afterwards in bank, but this decision, it has been said, does not relate to the power of the court, but rather to the right of the petitioner to a rehearing,⁷ and second rehearings have been granted in such cases.⁸

§ 463. When Power must be Exercised.—The power to grant a hearing in bank of a cause determined in department must be exercised within thirty days after judgment is pronounced in department.⁹ The power cannot be exercised afterwards, even though the last day falls on a Sunday or a holiday, as the supreme court is expressly excepted from the rule that no court must be open for the transaction of business upon holidays, and the constitution expressly provides that “the supreme court shall always be open for the transaction of business."¹⁰ Even if the petition is filed before the expiration of the thirty-day period, it cannot be granted where it does not reach the hands of the court until after the expiration of that period.¹¹

While an order granting a rehearing under this provision must be made and signed within thirty days after the judgment in department, it need not be filed within that time.¹²

It is therefore unnecessary as a matter of law to correct an entry as to the time of filing of an order filed after the expiration of such time, but nevertheless it is advisable to correct such date to remove any doubt as to the validity of future proceedings of the court.¹³

In cases decided in bank.—The power to grant rehearings of cases decided in bank without a previous decision in department must be exercised within thirty days after the judgment in bank, as section 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure so provides.¹⁴

§ 464. Grounds for Rehearing.—While at one time rehearings were granted almost as a matter of course,¹⁵ it is now necessary for an applicant therefor to satisfy the court that, owing to a mistake of law or a misunderstanding

ing of facts, its decision has done an injustice in the particular case, or that the case is one where the principle involved is important, and a serious doubt exists as to the correctness of the decision.¹⁶ In showing that the court misapprehended the facts in the record, it is not sufficient merely to point out that a material fact appearing in the record is not recited in the opinion, for whether all or a part or none of the facts are mentioned in the opinion, it is presumed that all the facts in the record bearing on the points decided have received due consideration.¹⁷ Where a judgment has been affirmed for want of appearance or brief by the appellant, the supreme court will not order a rehearing in bank, even though the appellant makes a sufficient showing therefor, if it appears that it would be useless to do so for the reason that upon another hearing the same judgment must follow.¹⁸ And it has been held that a rehearing need not be granted because of an oversight in considering a question which should have been considered, as such point may be disposed of on the petition for rehearing without ordering a rehearing.¹⁹

New points.—A party should present his whole case on the first hearing, and ought not to be permitted to argue it by piecemeal.²⁰ And it has been repeatedly held that where a case has been decided, a rehearing will not be granted for the purpose of considering a suggestion of error made for the first time in the petition therefor.¹ Under this rule, the court in deciding an appeal taken by the alternative method is justified in assuming that both parties have directed their attention to all the evidence relied upon in support of their contentions, and will not grant a rehearing to enable either party to present evidence not printed in their original briefs.² There is an exception to this rule where the matters urged in the argument for rehearing go to the jurisdiction of the court.³ It has been contended that the rule should not prevail where the cause was submitted without oral argument at the request of the respondent. But as bearing on this point it has been held that if the parties are granted the right to and do file supplemental briefs, such briefs take the place of oral argument, and points not urged either in the original or supplemental briefs cannot be raised for the first time upon a petition for rehearing.⁴

§ 465. Proceedings to Obtain — Parties.—A petition for rehearing cannot be filed by one who is not a party to the litigation and has no interest in behalf of or against either party thereto. A receiver appointed in a cause litigated by other parties has no standing or relation to the case which authorizes him to petition for a rehearing therein, even though he is served with notice of appeal.⁵

Petition and answer.—Unless perhaps the court so order upon its own motion, a cause cannot be reheard except upon a petition therefor.⁶ The filing of a petition for a rehearing is not a matter of right. It is a privilege given by the court, governed and limited entirely by its rules, and a compliance therewith is essential.⁷ Rule XXX of the supreme court provides as follows:

“Applications for a rehearing of a cause by the court rendering the judgment therein must be filed and a copy served on the adverse party, within twenty days after the judgment is pronounced. The adverse party may file an answer thereto not less than two days before the expiration of the time within which the rehearing can be granted. . . . The time herein prescribed shall not be extended, and the clerk must not file any such application or answer after the time therefor has expired. In civil cases such applications and answers must be printed.”

It behooves the petitioner to include in his petition all the grounds upon which a rehearing is claimed, as grounds not included therein are deemed waived.⁸ The provision as to the time for filing is mandatory, and cannot be avoided upon the ground of accident or excusable neglect, or it seems upon any other ground.⁹ If the petition is not served upon the adverse party, it will be disregarded.¹⁰

§ 466. Order on Petition and Effect Thereof.—To grant a rehearing it is necessary that the order be concurred in by as many justices as are necessary to pronounce judgment,—that is to say, a rehearing of a case decided in bank can be granted only upon the concurrence of four justices.¹¹ Section 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure attempts to regulate the exercise of the power to grant rehearings in cases decided in bank, and to require such order to “be made in writing, signed by five justices.” But this act is unconstitutional in so far as it requires the concurrence of more than four justices, as under the constitution a majority of the supreme court, consisting of four, may decide any matter within its jurisdiction. While the legislature has undoubted power to regulate the exercise of the power to grant rehearings, it has no power to take away or defeat the exercise of this jurisdiction. So, also, upon the principle of stare decisis, it has been held that a rehearing in such a case may be granted by an order of court entered upon its minutes, notwithstanding the statute.¹² The latter question, however, is now governed by subdivision 1 of rule XXVIII of the supreme court, which provides as follows:

“All orders of the supreme court granting rehearings, or for hearing in bank causes decided in departments, or for hearing in the supreme court after decision in a district court of appeal, shall be signed by the members of the court assenting thereto, and filed with the clerk.”

Where court is equally divided.—If the justices composing the court are equally divided in opinion, a rehearing will be denied. The rule in this respect seems to be that where the motion is such as to make an affirmative decision indispensable to the further progress of the action, the action must stop in case of an equal division.¹³

Effect of rehearing.—The effect of an order granting a rehearing is to vacate the judgment first rendered,¹⁴ and the opinion previously delivered. Until reaffirmed, the opinion does not have the force of an adjudication, and is entitled to no more consideration than the briefs of counsel. The opinion subsequent to the reargument constitutes the exposition of the law applicable to the facts of a case, and the only one to which the attention of the court can be directed.¹⁵ This is true though the order granting such rehearing limited the argument to a single question. Such limitation means no more than that the court is satisfied that the arguments and briefs upon the other points fully cover them.¹⁶

Rehearing in Supreme Court of Causes Decided by Appellate Courts.

§ 467. In General.—The constitution confers upon the supreme court power to order a rehearing before itself of causes decided by a district court of appeal. The provision is as follows:

“The supreme court shall have power . . . to order any cause pending before a district court of appeal to be heard and determined by the supreme court. The order last mentioned may be made . . . within thirty days after such judgment shall have become final therein. The judgments of the district courts of appeal shall become final therein upon the expiration of thirty days after the same shall have been pronounced.”¹⁷

The expiration of said period of thirty days without the making of an order by the supreme court ends its power in this regard and renders the judgment of the district court of appeal final for all purposes.¹⁸ A mere modification of the opinion made upon the denial of a petition for rehearing in a district court of appeal does not, however, affect the finality of the judgment, so as to authorize the granting of an application for transfer after the lapse of sixty days from the giving of the judgment of the district court.¹⁹

Number of justices who must concur.—To make an order for a hearing in the supreme court after a decision in a district court of appeal, there must be a concurrence therein of a majority of the members of the supreme court, namely, four justices.²⁰ The uniform practice upon such application as well as upon applications for hearing before the court in bank after decision in department, and for rehearing in bank after decision in bank, is for the justices to meet in consultation for their consideration. Though there is a sufficient concurrence where a justice, who for any reason will not be present at such consultation, affixes his signature to the order granting a hearing and rehearing, provided that he does not prior to the concurrence of three other justices withdraw his consent, or is not at the time of such concurrence for some reason disqualified to act, if, however, he should be absent from the state at that time and until after the expiration of the thirty-day period in which such order might be made, he is disqualified to act, and an order assented to only by him and three other justices is void.¹

§ 468. When Transfer will be Ordered.—The provision of the constitution authorizing the supreme court to grant a hearing before it of causes decided by a district court of appeal does not give a right of appeal or anything equivalent thereto, but merely confers upon the supreme court a purely discretionary power to be exercised for the purpose of securing uniformity and harmony in decisions.² When an appeal is properly taken to the district court of appeal in a case in which it has appellate jurisdiction under the constitution, a rehearing in the supreme court will be granted only when error appears upon the face of the opinion of the appellate court, or when a doubtful and important question is presented upon which the supreme court desires to hear further argument. In such a case a denial of a petition for rehearing might establish a mischievous precedent.³ The supreme court will not grant a hearing to ascertain whether or not the facts involved were accurately stated, and considered in the opinion of the appellate court, as this would be in effect to allow an appeal to the supreme court.⁴ But in causes properly appealed to the supreme court and referred to the district court for hearing and decision, the rule is different. In such causes, if it is contended that the case stated in the opinion of the district court differs materially from the case as it appears in the record, the supreme court feels bound to look into the record to see whether anything deserving consideration has been overlooked in deciding the case, or any of the facts misconceived in material particulars. If so, a rehearing is ordered notwithstanding the opinion of the district court may be correct on its face, because the complaining party has a right to the opinion of the supreme court upon the precise case shown by the record.⁵

New points.—On a petition after a decision by a district court of appeal for a rehearing in the supreme court, the petitioner cannot ask in effect for a first hearing of a question which should have been first determined in the district court of appeal.⁶

§ 469. Proceedings and Effect of Order Thereon.—Rule XXX of the supreme court provides as follows:

“Applications after a judgment of a district court of appeal has become final, for an order that the cause be heard and determined by the supreme court, must be accompanied by a copy of the opinion of the district court of appeal, showing the date of the filing thereof, and must be filed and a copy served on the adverse party, within ten days after the judgment of the district court of appeal has become final therein. The adverse party may file an answer thereto not less than ten days before the time for making such order for hearing in the supreme court will expire. . . . The time herein prescribed shall not be extended, and the clerk must not file any such application or answer after the time therefor has expired. In civil cases such applications and answers must be printed.”

A petition inadvertently filed after the expiration of the prescribed time will be stricken from the files.⁷ Rule XIII of the supreme court provides for the transfer of the record on filing of the petition, if such record is prepared under the alternative method.

Effect of denial of rehearing.—A denial of an application for a transfer of a case decided by a district court of appeal is not to be taken as an expression of any opinion by the supreme court or as equivalent thereto, in regard to any matter of law involved in the case and not stated in the opinion of the court, nor as an affirmative approval of the propositions of law laid down in such opinion. The refusal simply signifies that the court does not consider that the interests of justice, or the purposes for which the power was given, require its exercise in the particular case.⁸

N. REVIEW.

I. SCOPE AND EXTENT OF REVIEW.

General Principles.

§ 470. Review Generally.—The function of an appellate court is to review the action of an inferior court in rendering the judgment or making the order from which an appeal is taken.⁹ In its review of the action of the trial court an appellate court is bound by the record. It cannot consider matters outside the record,¹⁰ neither can it ordinarily consider or review matters not raised or considered in the trial court.¹¹ It cannot consider pleadings which have been withdrawn,¹² or have been superseded by amendment.¹³ So, also, it cannot review a special defense, which the trial court expressly refrained from passing upon,¹⁴ or evidence which has been excluded,¹⁵ or matters happening after the entry of judgment, as a rule.¹⁶ In determining whether evidence supports the findings, the court cannot consider affidavits which are not evidence touching the facts found.¹⁷

10. See supra, § 229 et seq.

11. See supra, § 67.

Since an appellate court takes the case as made by the trial court, it cannot examine into the merits of a tender which the defendant desires to make for the purpose of stopping the running of interest. Ferrea v. Tubbs, 125 Cal. 687, 58 Pac. 308.

12. Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299, 18 Pac. 394 (demurrer).

13. Bray v. Lowery, 163 Cal. 257, 124 Pac. 1004; Schneider v. Brown, 85 Cal. 205, 24 Pac. 715.

An appellant cannot urge as error an order overruling his demurrer to a pleading, where an amended pleading was afterwards filed by leave of court and this was not met by demurrer. Marsh v. Lapp, 180 Cal. 231, 180 Pac. 533.

An appellate court cannot determine questions of fact,¹⁸ or disturb the exercise of the trial court's discretion in the absence of an abuse thereof.¹⁹ It will not ordinarily review questions which are not pressed in the briefs or argument,²⁰ or which are waived by stipulation¹ or which are otherwise waived or abandoned. On the other hand, an appellate court is not limited in its review to the questions raised by counsel, or required to notice all the points taken by appellant's counsel or to follow his line of argument.² But it is at liberty to decide a case upon any points that its proper disposition may require, whether raised by counsel or not.³

Issues of fact in law and equity.—It is thoroughly settled in California that the mode of reviewing the action of a trial court upon an issue of fact is the same in cases formerly denominated cases at law and cases once called cases in equity.⁴

Theory of case.—It is well established that the case on appeal must be decided on the same theory on which it was tried in the court below.⁵ Where an issue is tacitly accepted by all the parties as properly presented and as the only issue, the appellate court will proceed upon the same theory,⁶ and the parties will not be allowed in such court for the first time to say that there was no such issue.⁷ So, also, an appellate court will assume the existence of facts which were assumed to exist in the court below, notwithstanding the fact that they were put in issue by the pleadings.⁸

§ 471. Review of Questions Unnecessary to Decision.—

An appellate court will not consider matters not necessary to the disposition of the appeal.⁹ Upon a determination that certain errors necessitate a reversal, other assignments of error which may not arise upon a new trial become unnecessary and will not be considered.¹⁰ An expression of opinion upon such points is not only superfluous but perhaps injudicious, as it is doubtful if such opinion would control the action of another tribunal in another case or be operative as a judgment in the appellate court itself.¹¹ Similar considerations apply to a decision based upon two or more grounds. When it is determined that one ground is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court, it is unnecessary to determine whether the other grounds are well founded or not.¹² So, also, when one sufficient finding supports the judgment, it is not necessary to consider other findings or matters as to evidence which have no relation to and cannot affect this particular uncontested finding.¹³ Where uncontradicted evidence warranted a trial court in directing a verdict, errors in the admission or rejection of other evidence need not be considered.¹⁴ And when an appeal from a judgment and from an order granting a new trial are heard together, the appeal from the judgment becomes inconsequential when the court determines that the order must be affirmed.¹⁵

For purpose of new trial.—By an amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure in 1880, it was enacted that “In giving its decision, if a new trial be granted, the [appellate] court shall pass upon and determine all the questions of law involved in the case, presented upon such appeal, and necessary to the final determination of the case."¹⁶

But even prior to the enactment of this provision, the courts not infrequently considered points which though unnecessary for the purposes of a decision on an appeal were deemed necessary or proper for the purposes of a new trial.¹⁷

Effect of consent to reversal.—While, as has been stated, a determination that certain errors necessitate a reversal renders a review of other errors immaterial, a respondent by consenting to a reversal because of certain errors, cannot deprive a defendant-appellant of the right to have an error in overruling his demurrer reviewed, where the question is involved as to whether he can be put to the labor and expense of a trial on the merits.¹⁸ undertake to determine abstract questions of law at the request of a party who shows that no substantial right can be affected by the decision either way. It may, for example, be advantageous for municipalities, desiring to issue bonds, to obtain an opinion of the supreme court in advance attesting the validity of the proposed issue, but such relief can be obtained only in a proper proceeding in which the decision of the question sought to be presented will be necessary to the disposition of a real controversy between parties having an actual interest in the matter in litigation.²⁰ If all the questions involved in an appeal become moot, the appeal will be dismissed.¹ And if certain points raised upon the appeal are moot, the court will not consider them but will confine its review to the rest of the case.²

§ 473. Consideration of Incompetent and Excluded Evidence.—In considering the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict or decision, an appellate court will consider all proper evidence embraced in the record,³ including incompetent evidence admitted without objection,⁴ and that improperly admitted over the respondent's objection.⁵ The question of the competency of the evidence is not before the court in a case where incompetent evidence was admitted without objection. Whatever was before the jury must be regarded as proper and legitimate to be considered.⁶ If evidence to prove a fact is not competent for some reason, it is the duty of the opposite party to make proper objection thereto. Failing to do so, he cannot afterwards object that the fact was not proved by the best evidence.⁷ And if he does interpose an objection and it is overruled, it is the error of the court in admitting the evidence which vitiates the verdict, not the consideration thereof by the court or jury; and if the party seeking to set aside the verdict is not in a position to take advantage of this error, he cannot object that the evidence was improperly admitted.⁸ The same rule applies to a review of an order granting a nonsuit.⁹ The court cannot, however, consider any evidence which was excluded or stricken out by the trial court, as it is not competent for an appellate court to say what a finding might or should have been if certain excluded evidence had been admitted.¹⁰

§ 474. Matters Happening After Entry of Judgment.—Ordinarily, it is the province of an appellate court to review the judgment of inferior courts as of the time when it was rendered, as ordinarily the judgment of a trial court is a determination of the rights of the parties as they existed at the commencement of the action.¹¹ If the judgment is affirmed, it is affirmed as of the date at which it was rendered.¹² If it is reversed, the case stands as if no judgment had been rendered by the inferior court.¹³ It is therefore manifest that error on the part of the trial court cannot be predicated by reason of any matter occurring subsequent to the rendition of the judgment appealed from.¹⁴ This rule is not, however, inflexible. Matters may arise subsequent to the commencement of an action which will affect the rights of the parties thereto, and the judgment to be rendered therein, and supplemental pleadings are authorized in order that these matters may be properly brought before the court. So, too, matters may arise subsequent to an appeal affecting the judgment appealed from, and although additional pleadings are not permitted in the appellate court, yet, upon proper suggestion and proof of such matters, they will be considered. A familiar illustration is where after an appeal from a judgment a new trial is granted in the superior court;¹⁵ or, when, after appeal, it appears that from some circumstances or fact occurring thereafter, its further prosecution involves only a moot question.¹⁶ In both cases, on proper showing necessarily outside the record, the appeal will be dismissed. So, too, an appeal will be dismissed when it is shown that the judgment appealed from has been satisfied,¹⁷ or that judgment was rendered upon a cause of action which did not survive, and the cause of action has abated, pending appeal, by the death of the appellant.¹⁸ The same result follows the repeal, pending appeal, of the statute upon which the jurisdiction of an appellate court to entertain the appeal is based, or upon which the judgment in a penal action depends.¹⁹ Upon the same principle an appellate court will consider the disposition, pending an appeal, of another appeal in another action intimately connected with the appeal before the court, when brought before the court and supported by evidence.²⁰

§ 475. Review on Appeal from Part of Judgment.— Upon an appeal from a part of a judgment or order not so intimately connected with the remainder that a reversal of the part appealed from requires a consideration of the whole case in the court below, an appellate court can review only the portion appealed from.¹ The unaf-

One appealing from a portion of a judgment cannot take advantage of errors in the portion not ap-

fects parts of the judgment or order must be deemed final, and can be enforced pending the appeal.² But where the part of the judgment appealed from is so interwoven and connected with the remainder, or so dependent thereon that the appeal from a part affects the other parts or involves a consideration of the whole, and is really an appeal from the whole, it seems that the appellate court may and should have power to extend its reversal to the entire judgment when necessary to accomplish justice,³ although obviously it cannot do so when the rights of parties not served with notice of appeal will be injuriously affected.⁴

Grounds of Decision Below.

§ 476. In General.—When an order granting relief is general in its terms, the appellate court will examine the entire record upon which the order is based, and affirm it, if it finds therein any ground upon which the order is justified. In other words, the order will be affirmed if it can be sustained upon any of the assigned grounds,⁵ for it will be presumed that the order was made upon that ground.⁶ This rule has been applied to orders sustaining demurrers,⁷ orders striking out pleadings,⁸ orders granting nonsuits,⁹ and orders granting new trials.¹⁰

Where reasons for order are given.—While it is true that an appellate court will not review matters not considered by the court below, and that an appellant cannot on appeal urge matters not presented in the court below,¹¹ it is equally true that the court will not review the reasons which the trial court gave for its judgment or order, and will not reverse an order or judgment merely because given for a wrong or insufficient reason. If the judgment or order in question is right upon any theory of law applicable to the case, it must be sustained regardless of the considerations which may have moved the trial court to its conclusion.¹² It was said by Mr. Justice Temple in an early case, in respect to the rule that the appellate court will review the rulings and decisions of the trial court, rather than the reasons given for such rulings: "The fact that the statute requires the judge to state in writing the grounds upon which the motion was granted or denied does not make it incumbent upon the prevailing party to defend the logic of the judge. It is enough if the decision be correct."¹³ In other words, it is judicial action, and not judicial reasoning or argument, which is the subject of review. If the former be correct, the appellate court is not concerned with the faults of the latter.¹⁴ Moreover, any opinion of the court below is not a part of the record, and cannot be looked to by an appellant for the purpose of predicated error in the ruling of the trial court.¹⁵ Of course, this rule does not prevent the citation of the opinion of the trial court in argument to assist the appellate court in reaching a correct solution of the questions submitted, there being no attempt in such case to hold the action of the trial court erroneous because of mistaken reasons therefor.¹⁶

§ 477. Application of Rule Generally.—If a complaint is insufficient upon any ground properly specified in a demurrer thereto, an order sustaining the demurrer to a defective complaint will be upheld, even though the particular ground upon which the court sustained it may be untenable.¹⁷ A contrary holding might deprive a party defendant of a right to be heard upon any or all the grounds of his demurrer because the trial court designates one as a ground for its order.¹⁸ Furthermore, the code contemplates a general order alone. Any matter inserted in the order other than the decision for or against the demurrer is surplusage, and not to be regarded. The question always is: Ought the demurrer to have been sustained?¹⁹ A ruling on demurrer will not be sustained, however, upon a ground not specified in the demurrer.²⁰ This rule has been applied also to orders dissolving attachments,¹ to orders granting nonsuits,² and to orders

Evidence.—A ruling in excluding evidence will be sustained regardless of the ground of objection stated by counsel, if the true objection could not be obviated on being stated. If the court decides correctly in rejecting testimony, it is not important whether the best objection was made or whether any objection was made. An objection to evidence is but a reason offered for its exclusion. The objection may be untenable or insufficient; yet, if sustained, and there appears any other reason for which the evidence should have been excluded, the ruling must stand.⁵ So, too, where the court admits evidence, its rul-

4. In Mathews v. Mathews, 33 Cal. App. Dec. 299, 193 Pac. 586, a provision in an interlocutory decree of divorce as to alimony was not carried into the final decree. The defendant moved to vacate this provision in the interlocutory decree upon the ground that the final decree did not contain any direction as to the payment of alimony and because of the changed financial situation of the parties. "The court did not grant such motion, but made an order which shows by its very terms that it was based upon the proposition that a provision for the payment of alimony in an interlocutory judgment of divorce cannot be enforced unless it is carried into the final decree. Such is not the law"; and the principle that the appellate court will sustain the action of the trial court upon any ground specified in the notice of motion is inapplicable.

5. Davey v. Southern Pacific Co., 116 Cal. 325, 48 Pac. 117. See supra, §§ 85, 86. This distinction is undoubtedly due to the fact that the trial court may exclude evidence on its own motion.

§ 478. Application to Order Granting New Trial.—This rule finds frequent application to orders granting motions for new trial. The appellate court is not confined to a consideration of the point upon which a new trial was granted, but will affirm the order if upon the whole record it appears that a new trial should be had.⁷ A contrary rule might work great injustice. The moving party whose motion has prevailed is not "aggrieved," and has no ground for an appeal. If the appellate court should be limited to a review of merely the ground designated by the lower court, and that ground should be held insufficient, the moving party would be deprived of the new trial to which the record might show that he is manifestly entitled.⁸ Moreover, if the trial judge prepares a written opinion, such opinion though printed in the transcript, is not part of the record on appeal, and cannot be considered for any purpose, or at least it cannot limit the appellate court's review of the grounds specified in the motion.⁹ The ground upon which the order is sustained must, of course, be properly specified in the notice of intention to Review on Appeal from Final Judgment.

§ 480. In General.—Section 956 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

“Upon an appeal from a judgment, the court may review the verdict or decision, and any intermediate ruling, proceeding, order or decision which involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment, or which substantially affects the rights of a party. The court may also on such appeal review any order on motion for a new trial. The provisions of this section do not authorize the court to

Upon an appeal from a final judgment, an appellate court may review errors affecting the judgment appearing on the face of the judgment-roll,¹⁸ and all objections and exceptions affecting the judgment shown by a proper bill of exceptions or reporter's transcript,¹⁹ but not errors in rulings and orders made subsequent to the judgment.²⁰

Default judgment.—As a default judgment is a final appealable judgment, it follows that all errors disclosed by the record can be reviewed and corrected on an appeal from such a judgment as well as on a judgment after issue joined.¹ On an appeal from such judgment, the appellant may have reviewed the question whether or not a default was properly entered,² and whether or not a motion to vacate an entry of default was properly granted or denied,³ and whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.⁴

§ 481. Pleadings, Verdict, Findings and Judgment—Pleadings.—An appellate court, upon an appeal from the judgment, may review the question whether the judgment is supported by the pleadings, and whether the com-

reviewable on appeal from a judgment where it does not involve the merits of the action or necessarily affect the judgment thereafter rendered.¹⁵ For the same reason the court cannot review an order allowing an amendment to an answer in a divorce action so as to more particularly deny that there was any community property, when the decree of divorce reserves the question as to the division of community property for further consideration.¹⁶ The fact that the appeal is taken by the alternative method does not authorize the court, on appeal from a judgment, to review interlocutory orders directly appealable.¹⁷

Attachment.—An order refusing to dissolve an attachment cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment for the reason that such order does not affect the judgment,¹⁴ and also for the reason that under the present procedure the order is directly appealable.¹⁵ But even though it were not appealable, it could not be reviewed on such appeal for the reason first given.

References.—Upon an appeal from a final judgment, the appellate court may review an order setting aside a report of a referee appointed to take an account,¹⁶ or to take testimony,¹⁷ an order overruling exceptions to a referee's report,¹⁸ and the action of the court upon the reports of referees who have resigned or died or have suffered other disability.¹⁹

costs,¹ and an order on motion to strike out a cost bill.² Such orders when made after judgment are directly appealable as special orders made after final judgment,³ and are not reviewable on appeal from the judgment.⁴ But where costs are allowed in a judgment in the first instance, subsequent proceedings striking out a cost bill and retaxing costs have been held to be proceedings having relation to the judgment and to become a part of it so as to be reviewable upon appeal from the judgment.⁵

§ 485. Subsequent Orders and Order on Motion for New Trial.—On an appeal from the final judgment, the court could not, prior to 1915, consider special orders made thereafter;⁶ nor review an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment appealed from.⁷ In 1915, when the right of appeal from an order on a motion for a new trial was abolished except in the single case specified in section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the legislature provided for a

where an order as to costs is less than three hundred dollars, the appellate court is without jurisdiction of an appeal therefrom. This case, as already shown, was expressly overruled in Harron v. Harron, 123 Cal. 508, 56 Pac. 334 (see supra, § 51), and, therefore, it is doubtful whether Quitow v. Perrin, 120 Cal. 255, 52 Pac. 632, may now be regarded as authority upon this point. review of such order on an appeal from the judgment, something that previously could not be done.⁸ It is thus apparent that notwithstanding the abolition of the right of appeal, the right of review of such order was preserved.⁹ It was the clear intent of the legislature in taking away the right of appeal from an order denying a new trial by the amendment of 1915 to provide for a review of all matters that might be considered on such an appeal on an appeal from the judgment.¹⁰

As the remedy for a refusal to settle a statement on motion for new trial is mandamus, it follows that such refusal cannot be reviewed either on appeal from the judgment or an order denying a new trial.¹¹

Review upon Appeal from Order on Motion for New Trial.

§ 486. In General.—Upon an appeal from an order upon a motion for a new trial, when allowed,¹² the appellate court is limited in its review of the action of the trial court to the grounds upon which such a motion was based,¹³ and upon which the new trial was asked in the decision.⁷ As errors of law occurring at the trial, the court may review errors in the rulings upon the admissibility of evidence.⁸ So, also, it may review a ruling of the court in granting or refusing a nonsuit,⁹ whether made upon an offer of proof by counsel or after the close of the evidence in the case.¹⁰ But the court cannot, on such appeal, examine whether the findings support the conclusions of law, or the judgment;¹¹ as this is not "a decision against law" under the authorities in the state. Decision against law.—If there is a failure to find upon a material issue, the decision is against law, and may be reviewed upon an appeal from an order upon motion for a new trial.¹³

§ 488. Matters as to Pleadings and Parties.—It is well established that the court cannot, upon an appeal from an order on motion for new trial, consider questions relating to the sufficiency of the complaint.¹⁴ The correctness of the order must be determined by the record upon which it rests. On the hearing of the motion, reference may be had to the pleadings, but only for the purpose of ascertaining the issues in the case, and determining the correctness of any ruling upon objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that it was not within the issues. The sufficiency of the complaint, however, is not involved in the re-examination of an issue of fact after a trial and decision by a court or jury, and is not therefore reviewable.¹⁵ It is true that this rule deprives a successful defendant of the means at this stage of the proceedings of having his demurrer passed upon, as he cannot appeal from the judgment because he is the prevailing party. He may, however, have the sufficiency of the complaint reviewed by refusing to answer when his demurrer was overruled, and appealing from the judgment for the plaintiff thereon, or he may, if the order granting a new trial is affirmed, renew his demurrer. On the other hand, to permit the defendant to raise the question on appeal from an order granting a new trial would be a hardship on the plaintiff, who would have no remedy if the court should hold the complaint fatally bad.¹⁶ Similar considerations preclude a review of the sufficiency of an answer.¹⁷ As demurrers go to the sufficiency of the pleadings, it is settled that rulings on demurrers cannot be reviewed upon such appeal.¹⁸ So, also, the court cannot, upon appeal from an order on new trial, review orders upon motions to strike out pleadings,¹⁹ or questions as to the form of action.²⁰ This rule precludes a review upon an appeal from an order on motion for new trial of an error in overruling an objection to the reception of any evidence, because no cause of action was stated in the complaint, as the objection is in effect a demurrer to the complaint upon that ground.¹ Where, however, the motion for nonsuit is based upon the insufficiency of the evidence, the ruling thereon is reviewable upon appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial;² and it has been held that where the motion for nonsuit challenges the sufficiency of the complaint in that it sets forth a contract on which an action could not be maintained, and where the ruling of the court on the motion for nonsuit and the exception thereto have been embodied in a bill of exceptions on motion for new trial, such ruling may be reviewed as an error of law occurring on the trial, upon appeal from the order.³

Review upon Other Appeals.

§ 490. On Appeal from Interlocutory Orders and Orders After Final Judgment.—Upon an appeal from interlocutory orders or special orders made after final judgment, the appellate court may review only the questions raised by the order appealed from, and it cannot review errors assigned on other orders not involved in the order appealed from.¹⁴ Upon an appeal from an order on a motion made under section 663 of the code to set aside a judgment and enter a different judgment, the court may review the question whether the conclusions of law are consistent with and supported by the findings,¹⁵ or whether the judgment or decree is consistent with and supported by a special verdict.¹⁶ But as an appeal from a special order made after final judgment cannot be considered as an appeal from the judgment in the action, the judgment and the proceedings on which the judgment depends cannot be reviewed on such appeal.¹⁷ So, also, an objection that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings cannot be reviewed on an appeal from an order refusing to vacate a judgment.¹⁸ Again, upon an appeal from an order deny-

§ 491. Upon Other Appeals.—An objection to the sufficiency of a complaint cannot be considered on a motion to dismiss an action, and cannot be considered on appeal from an order granting such motion.²⁰ A proceeding for the appointment of a receiver is not a special proceeding, but is a proceeding auxiliary to the action in aid of which the receiver is appointed, and therefore an order made after final judgment directing the receiver to pay over moneys in his hands is not a final judgment in a special proceeding, but a special order after judgment, so that upon an appeal therefrom the order appointing the receiver is not reviewable.¹ Since a deficiency judgment in a mortgage foreclosure suit is merely an incident to the judgment of foreclosure, because it was adjudged in the original decree that the plaintiff was entitled to that relief, the sufficiency of the complaint cannot be determined on an appeal from such a deficiency judgment.²

On appeals in probate proceedings.—On appeal from a final order or judgment admitting a will to probate, the court may review any nonappealable, intermediate ruling the court may make, and may review an order dismissing a contest of the probate for lack of interest,³ and an order sustaining a demurrer to the contest for the same reason.⁴ But since the validity of trust clauses in a will is not an order refusing to set aside a decree of default and interlocutory divorce, that the evidence was insufficient to prove the jurisdictional fact of residence).

errors committed against the successful party which we notice on appeal, but those committed against the party complaining."¹⁰ An appellate court cannot correct an error as to a party who does not join in the appeal,¹¹ but it may affirm the judgment as to him and reverse as to the appellant.¹² A party who does not join in a motion for new trial cannot complain of error in denying the motion.¹³

Where a plaintiff and others as cross-defendants join in one answer, without asking the court to litigate their rights as against each other, and also join in an appeal, they cannot complain that the court did not adjust their rights among themselves. The proper procedure in such case is for them to ask appropriate relief in their pleading and for the one considering himself aggrieved to appeal, making the others respondents.¹⁴

§ 493. Errors Injurious Affecting Appellant.—An appellant is entitled to assign for error only such proceedings in the trial court as injuriously affect him, without regard to errors of which others might complain.¹⁵ He

One who does not assail a finding that he has no interest in the subject of the litigation cannot object to errors in the proceedings. Thus, where there is a finding that an alleged heir is not related to a decedent, and such alleged heir does not attack the finding as being unsupported by the evidence, he cannot complain of a decree distributing the decedent's estate.⁵ So, also, one who is ousted from an office and who does not assail a finding that he was not elected thereto cannot complain of that part of the decree adjudging that another is entitled to the office.⁶

necessary,¹⁶ by his subsequent conduct,¹⁷ by stipulation,¹⁸ or otherwise.¹⁹ Thus, an objection to the allowance of an amendment to a pleading is waived by pleading over.²⁰ A party does not waive his demurrer¹ or motion² by submitting it without argument, as the objection is not taken by the argument, but by the demurrer or motion. Whether a failure to appear and prosecute a motion is an abandonment of it is uncertain. It has been so held,³ but it may be that, under the rules of court, the absence of the party has only the effect of waiving his right to argument.⁴ Where an objection to offered evidence is sustained and thereafter the objecting party withdraws his objection and offers to allow the party to recall his witnesses and produce the testimony, the party offering the evidence waives his right to complain if he does not avail himself of the privilege of introducing his testimony.⁵

16. See supra, §§ 74-93, inclusive, as to necessity of objection. But the failure to object to the rendition of judgment upon a report of a referee in the court below is not a waiver of the right to have exceptions to the report reviewed on appeal. Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 322.

As to findings.—A party cannot complain of the correctness of a finding in accord with the allegations of his verified pleading,⁶ or with the provisions of a stipulation into which he entered.⁷ It is not permissible for an appellant to frame his pleading and try a case upon one state of facts and then on appeal ask a reversal upon a state of facts contradictory thereto.⁸ And one who stipulates to a waiver of findings other than those filed upon the rendition of an interlocutory decree cannot complain that the findings are not sufficiently full.⁹

§ 496. Errors Committed or Invited by Appellant.—Parties must abide by the consequences of their own acts and cannot seek a reversal of a case upon appeal for errors which they had committed or invited. One who by his conduct induces the commission of some error by the trial court, or, in other words, who has invited error, is estopped from insisting that the action of the court is erroneous.¹⁰

Application of rule.—For example, one who requests the sustaining¹¹ or overruling¹² of a demurrer, or who requests any other order,¹³ is estopped from asserting that the order is erroneous. An appellant who has treated a question as an issue in a case will not upon appeal be heard to say that instructions¹⁴ or findings¹⁵ thereon are erroneous as outside the issues. An appellant cannot on appeal complain of an interpretation of an instrument in his pleading.¹⁶ A defendant who prevents a plaintiff from curing a defect of parties cannot object to the non-joinder on appeal.¹⁷ So, also, a defendant who prevents the plaintiff from proving a part of his case is precluded from urging on appeal the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to sustain findings in his favor.¹⁸ For like reason, where a judgment is reversed at the instance of one of several coparties, and the appellant causes the judgment to be vacated by the trial court, he cannot complain that the coparties not appealing take part in the § 497. Invited Error as to Evidence and Instructions.— An appellant cannot object to the admission of incompetent evidence which he offered or brought out,¹ or whose withdrawal he objected to, or which he prevented from being withdrawn.² And if he introduces or calls out improper evidence, he is precluded from objecting to evidence of like character introduced by his adversary.³ While one error cannot be held to offset another, a party introducing improper evidence may well be estopped to complain of the court's permitting the introduction of evidence of the other party by way of rebuttal.⁴

theory upon which these cases proceed is that by consenting to the judgment or order, the party has expressly waived or abandoned all objection, opposition or exception to it, and therefore he should not afterwards be allowed, on appeal, to question its propriety.¹²

One who does not stand upon his pleading when a demurrer to it is sustained, but takes some action indicating an acquiescence in the ruling, cannot complain of it.¹ So, also, a party filing a special demurrer waives

1. A party waives any error in an order sustaining a demurrer to his pleading by filing an amended pleading. Brittan v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 112 Cal. 1, 44 Pac. 339; Ganceart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 281, 33 Pac. 92; Madden v. Occidental & Oriental S. S. Co., 86 Cal. 445, 25 Pac. 5; Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 25. A party desiring to test the question as to the correctness of a judgment sustaining a demurrer should leave the pleadings where the judgment leaves them. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 14 Cal. 25.

A plaintiff who voluntarily dismisses his action upon the sustaining of a demurrer to his complaint is deemed to have acquiesced in the ruling and cannot urge it as error; Home Real Estate Co. v. Winnants, 39 Cal. App. 643, 179 Pac. 534.

the objections raised by consenting that it be overruled.² But this rule is not applicable to a general demurrer. A failure of the complaint to state a cause of action is not waived even by a failure to demur, and it is obvious that this objection is not waived by consenting that it be overruled.³

However, under the California practice, a defendant by pleading over after an adverse decision on his demurrer is not deemed to have withdrawn his demurrer and to have acquiesced in the ruling, so as to preclude him from afterwards urging the error as a ground for reversal.⁴ And where testimony outside the issue is erroneously admitted in evidence over objection, the fact that the defendant in rebuttal introduced some evidence of the same general character as that objected to does not estop him from urging the objection. This is not invited error. Neither does it fall within the rule that a party who calls out evidence thus precludes himself from objecting to evidence of like character introduced by his adversary. It follows that the objection is not waived.⁵

A failure to object is not necessarily a consent to the proceedings so as to preclude a party from urging error in them on appeal,⁶ nor does a concession by the appel-

5. After the court had held over appellant's objection that the evidence was competent and had permitted the respondent, who had the burden, to introduce such evidence, the appellant in seeking to overcome the case made by the respondent could follow the theory laid down by the court without impliedly admitting the court's theory to be right, and without waiving his right to question the court's action. *Fernandez v. III. PRESUMPTIONS.

General Principles.

§ 499. Rule Stated.—An appellate court will never indulge in presumptions to defeat a judgment.⁸ It will never presume that an error was committed, or that something was done or omitted to be done which constitutes error.⁹ On the contrary, every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in favor of the orders and judgments of superior courts.¹⁰ It is the duty of a

so, or does not include in the bill of exceptions everything necessary to show that the action of the trial court was erroneous, and if there are any matters which could have been presented to the court below which would have authorized the judgment or order complained of, it will be presumed that such matters were presented.¹² In a case where there are two presumptions equally reasonable arising upon the face of the record, that which will sustain the judgment will be adopted.¹³

§ 500. Limitations on Power to Indulge Presumptions.—There is a well-defined limit to an appellate tribunal's power to indulge in presumptions in support of the orders or judgments of a court. It can indulge in no presumption which does violence to the facts as presented by the record of an inferior court.¹⁴ Whenever the record states the evidence or makes an averment with reference to a jurisdictional fact, it will be understood to speak the truth on that point, and it will not be presumed that there was other or different evidence respecting the fact or that the fact was otherwise than is averred.¹⁵ So, also, a bill of exceptions is presumed to contain all the evidence material to rulings excepted to, and it cannot be presumed that an error appearing therein was cured by matters not contained in the bill.¹⁶ As stated in an early case, "Legal presumptions do not come to the aid of the record except as to acts or facts touching which the record is silent. Where the record is silent, it will be presumed that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done; but when the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done."¹⁷

Effect of papers not properly in record.—Papers which are not properly a part of the record are not entitled to consideration even though included in the transcript, and do not preclude a court of review from indulging presumptions in aid of the action of a trial court.¹⁸

Presumption against stipulated facts.—The office of presumptions is to supply the absence of facts, not to overthrow admitted facts. And when findings are waived because the facts are stipulated, the stipulated facts become part of the judgment-roll and the findings upon which the judgment rests. Consequently, no presumptions can be indulged on appeal against any stipulated fact.¹⁹

Application of Rule.

§ 501. Application in General.—The rule of presumptions on appeal has been frequently applied by appellate courts. When the record upon appeal is so imperfect that a court of review cannot ascertain therefrom whether or not the rulings of a trial court were erroneous, it will be presumed they were correct.²⁰ If no exception to a ruling of court appears in the record, it must be presumed that no exception was taken.¹ In the absence of any record showing that the appellant objected to a ruling of a trial court or to an irregular method of procedure it must be assumed on appeal that he consented thereto, in which case, conceding that without such consent the court erred, the appellant is in no position to complain.²

If there is nothing in the record to the contrary, it will be presumed that an undertaking on attachment was in due form,³ that a receiver was regularly appointed,⁴ and that a lost record was properly supplied.⁵ Where one of several coparties appeals from a judgment against them, the appellate court is bound to presume that there was no error as to the parties not appealing.⁶ Likewise, if there is nothing in the record to the contrary, where the trial of an action took place more than five years after the filing of the answer, it will be presumed that the trial court had before it a stipulation extending time and authorizing the proceeding taken.⁷ And it may even be presumed that the trial court disregarded its rules for sufficient cause, and to subserve the ends of justice.⁸

Exercise of discretion.—When a matter rests within the discretion of a trial court, it will be presumed, unless the contrary is made to appear, that the trial court properly exercised its discretion.⁹ And the burden in all cases is upon the appellant to make it appear that the discretion reposing in the court was abused.¹⁰

Application to probate courts.—When the probate court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, all intendments are in favor of the correctness of the action of the court, the same as other courts of record.¹¹ court over the subject matter and of the person of the defendant, it will be presumed that the trial court ascertained that it had jurisdiction before rendering judgment. A contrary assumption would involve a presumption that the court failed to do its duty, and such a presumption is never indulged.¹² If, however, the record discloses a recital in the judgment or judgment-roll, that jurisdiction has been acquired, or facts from which jurisdiction may be inferred, there is no occasion for any presumption,¹³ or at least it will be presumed that the recitals are true.¹⁴

A different rule prevails when the judgment is rendered after a default of the defendant. Upon a direct attack upon such a judgment by appeal, there is no presumption that the court had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. Unless the record in some way discloses the acquisition of jurisdiction over the defendant, the judgment will be reversed.¹⁵ While, in such case, there is no presumption in favor of the existence of any fact essential to the jurisdiction of the court over would not warrant the judgment rendered, it will be presumed the defendant was personally served. Bank of Commerce & Trust Co. v. Kenney, 175 Cal. 59, 165 Pac. 8 (judgment quieting title).

Referring to this statement the court, in Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110, 40 Pac. 24, said: "The phrase 'direct attack' in the above quotation evidently refers to appeals from the judgment"); McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300; Schloss v. White, 16 Cal. 65.

the defendant, yet, in all matters of which the judgment contains a recital, its verity, in the absence of any contradictory evidence in a bill of exceptions, will be presumed as fully as upon a collateral attack. If such recital finds support in other portions of the record which under any condition of facts could exist, it will be presumed, in the absence of a contradictory showing, that such condition of facts existed.¹⁶

Organization of court.—When a judge of one county sits in another, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed on an appeal from an order made by him, that he was requested so to serve by the judge of the superior court of the latter county, or by the Governor, as provided in the constitution.¹⁷

Venue.—Where the complaint and the record are silent as to the place of residence of the defendant, it will be presumed upon an appeal from an order denying a motion by a defendant for a change of the place of trial, that he is a resident of the county wherein the action is commenced.¹⁸

§ 503. Grounds for Order.—Where the record does not show upon what grounds an order on a motion is made, the ruling must be presumed to have been correct,¹⁹ and to have been made upon some good ground.²⁰ Where an

Order granting a motion to vacate a judgment is general in its terms and can be sustained upon any of the grounds stated in the motion, an appellate court is bound to assume that it was granted on that ground.¹ The same rule is applicable to an order granting a new trial.² And where a change of venue is denied and the grounds upon which the demand therefor was based do not appear in the record, it will be presumed that they were wholly insufficient,³ or that the denial was put upon the ground that the defendant did not act with due diligence.⁴

§ 504. Parties and Process.—In the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, it will be presumed in support of a judgment that an order substituting parties was made on notice,⁵ or upon the consent of the appellant.⁶ So, also, unless it otherwise appears from the record, it will be presumed that the addition of a party after the filing of the complaint was made by leave of court.⁷ In an action against a minor, it will be presumed on appeal upon the judgment-roll that the trial court regularly appointed a guardian ad litem who appeared and answered.⁸

Process.—When the proof of service of process consists of a written admission of the defendant, it will be presumed in favor of a judgment thereon that the genuine-

§ 505. Pleadings.—Where the record does not show what action was taken on a demurrer, it will be presumed that the demurrer was overruled,¹¹ or withdrawn or waived.¹² If the parties go to trial after an order overruling a special demurrer, it will be presumed upon an appeal upon the judgment-roll that the error was waived, or the trial was had by consent.¹³ Where a complaint in intervention is not set out in the record, it will be presumed that a demurrer thereto was properly overruled.¹⁴ And upon appeal upon the judgment-roll from a judgment entered for failure to answer after demurrer overruled, it will be presumed that notice of the ruling on the demurrer was given.¹⁵ So, also, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing upon what ground a pleading was stricken out, it will be presumed that the action of the court was proper.¹⁶ When, however, an appeal is taken from a judgment for the plaintiff on the pleadings, the defendant's denials must be taken as true.¹⁷

Sufficiency of complaint.—After verdict it will be presumed that facts imperfectly alleged have been proved, but it cannot presume that a material fact not at all stated has been proved.¹⁸ Nothing, it has been said, is to be presumed after verdict but what is expressly stated in the declaration or what is necessarily implied from the facts which are stated.¹⁹ It has been held, however, that an omission to allege the disallowance by an administrator of the claim sued on will be presumed to have been proved.²⁰ So, also, in support of findings not within the issues, it will be presumed, in a proper case in the absence of evidence, that the facts found were proved without objection.¹

Defense of statute of limitations.—Upon an appeal from a judgment against a party who is entitled to interpose the defense of the bar of the statute of limitations, it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing in the record to the contrary, that the defense was waived.²

Amended and supplemental pleadings.—A recital in an amended or supplemental pleading that it was filed by leave of court will be accepted as a verity, in the absence of an affirmative showing in the record to the contrary.³ And even where there is no such declaration, and there is no affirmative showing that it is not true, an appellate court will presume that an amended pleading was duly filed, or filed with the trial court's permission.⁴ So, also, where the contrary does not appear, it will be presumed that copies of such pleadings were served on the adverse parties,⁵ or if they appeared by attorney, upon their attorneys,⁶ and that evidence thereof was before the court when it made its decree.⁷ An insufficient waiver of notice of all further proceedings does not overcome this presumption.⁸ A refusal to allow an amendment will be presumed correct when the character of the amendment is not shown by the record.⁹

§ 506. Dismissal, Nonsuit and Directed Verdict.—Proceedings had upon motions to dismiss¹⁰ and for a nonsuit¹¹ are within the rule of presumptions and will be presumed regular unless the record shows the contrary. On an appeal upon the judgment-roll alone, a dismissal will be presumed to have been ordered on some good ground and in conformity with the rules of law. If the record permits, a reasonable inference is that the dismissal was for failure to prosecute with due diligence.¹²

The presumption in favor of an order granting a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence is not very strong, however.¹³ The evidence must be construed as strongly as possible the other way. The appellate court is bound to accept as proved every fact which the evidence tended to prove and which was essential to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to a recovery upon the cause of action stated in the complaint.¹⁴ Not only this, but it is also its duty to resolve all reasonable inferences that may be drawn in favor of the plaintiff.¹⁵ The same construction must be placed upon the statement of counsel when reviewing an order directing a verdict on an opening statement.¹⁶ So, also, where a verdict is directed at the conclusion of all the evidence, every intendment is to be indulged in favor of the party against whom the verdict is directed.¹⁷ There is no material difference between the rule governing the appellate court in considering the sufficiency of the evidence, where the trial court has directed a verdict, from that where a nonsuit is granted upon motion after the evidence of both parties is in.¹⁸

Trial.

§ 507. Conduct of Trial.—If there is nothing in the record to the contrary, it will be presumed that the proceedings upon the trial of an action were regular. If both issues of fact and law are joined, it will be presumed upon appeal from a judgment upon the merits upon the judgment-roll that the issues of law were first disposed of.¹⁹ Where a judgment recites that the cause was regularly heard before the court sitting without a jury, and it nowhere appears in the record that the appellant demanded a jury, it will be presumed that a jury was waived.²⁰ So, also, if a jury render a verdict as to special issues, and the court finds on the remaining issues and renders judgment on all such findings, it will be presumed that a jury had been expressly waived as to issues tried and determined by the court.¹ But where the court rejects the special findings of the jury and renders judgment inconsistent therewith, it will not be presumed that the jury was waived or that the party voluntarily relinquished the verdict returned. The action of the court in such case is in effect a vacation of the verdict, and after such an order the court cannot proceed and determine the cause, but must order a new trial.² Where the record does not show what the request was, or upon what issues an appellant desired a special verdict, a denial thereof will be presumed correct.³ And it will be presumed that the jury was instructed to disregard improper argument, if the instructions are not in the transcript.⁴

§ 508. Evidence on Trial and on Hearing of Motions.—When an appeal is taken upon the judgment-roll alone without any bill of exceptions, it is necessarily admitted by an appellant that no errors were committed in the admission or rejection of evidence, and that the evidence sustains and justifies the findings.⁵ In such case it will be presumed that the court ruled correctly in admitting evidence, that the evidence was competent and admissible under the pleadings,⁶ that it went in without objection,⁷ or that all objections were waived,⁸ and that it supports the verdict, or findings and judgment.⁹ It will be presumed, in the absence of anything in the record justifying a contrary inference, that the preliminary proof showing the admissibility of written evidence was made.¹⁰ And when evidence is admissible for a limited purpose only and the instructions are not in the record, it will be presumed that the trial court so limited it.¹¹

Where evidence was excluded.—A ruling excluding evidence is presumed correct where the evidence is no part of the record and no offer of proof was made.¹² Where the record does not disclose the nature or grounds of an objection to offered evidence, and a valid objection could have been made to receiving the evidence, it will be assumed in favor of a ruling excluding the evidence that such objection was made.¹³ Where a court excluded evidence on the ground it would take judicial notice thereof, and the evidence was admissible, it will be presumed that the court did as it announced it would do.¹⁴ Where the trial court in admitting incompetent evidence reserves the right to strike it out, if it sees fit, it may be presumed that it did so.¹⁵ And where testimony is received upon the understanding that it was not to be considered unless other facts are proved, and the case shows that the party offering it failed to make such proof, it will be presumed on appeal that the testimony was discarded.¹⁶

Upon appeal from orders.—Where the record upon an appeal from an order does not show the evidence upon which the order was based, it will be presumed that the order was properly made, and that the evidence necessary to sustain it was presented to the court.¹⁷ An indorsement of certain affidavits that they were used on the hearing does not raise any presumption that such affidavits constitute all the affidavits used, and it will be presumed in favor of an order that other evidence and affidavits were received on the hearing sufficient to support it.¹⁸ And when it appears from the order itself that, in addition to the affidavits, oral evidence was heard on the motion, it must be presumed that the oral evidence warranted the order made, even though it be conceded that the affidavits in themselves are insufficient.¹⁹

§ 509. Instructions.—Instructions not incorporated in the record will be presumed correct and will not be reviewed.²⁰ When the record contains no part of the evidence, the judgment will not be disturbed on account of instructions alleged to be erroneous, unless it appears that such instructions would have been erroneous under every conceivable state of facts.¹ In such case it will be presumed that the evidence was such as to justify instructions objected to as being misleading because abstract propositions of law.² Instructions are to be read and considered as a whole. Hence, the fact that some of them, when taken severally, fail to enunciate propositions of law in precise terms and with legal accuracy, does not render them erroneous if the imperfections are modified or qualified by the remaining instructions.³ Where, therefore, all the instructions are not included in the record, it will be presumed that were the whole charge before the appellate court, all their imperfections were harmonized and a correct statement of the law was made.⁴

If the record does not show at whose request instructions were given, it will be presumed that they were requested by the appellant who claims them to be erroneous.⁵ And likewise where there is a failure to give an instruction and the record does not show a request therefor, it will be presumed that no request was made.⁶

Verdict and Findings.

§ 510. In General.—All reasonable inferences are to be indulged to support the findings and verdict.⁷ It cannot be presumed upon appeal that a trial court in making its findings ignored the rules for determining the sufficiency of the evidence.⁸ Nor will it be presumed that the trial court allowed itself to be influenced by evidence which was stricken out.⁹ And where the findings are amply sustained by competent evidence, it will be presumed that the trial court disregarded incompetent evidence admitted over objection.¹⁰ When it is necessary to establish certain facts, such as fraud and undue influence, that the evidence be clear and convincing, it will be presumed, in support of a finding of such fact, that the trial court was governed by these considerations in weighing the evidence.¹¹ So, too, in support of a verdict it must be presumed that the jury decided the case upon the theory adopted by the parties,¹² and that they followed the instructions and found the facts to be such as to justify their verdict in the light of the law laid down in the instructions.¹³

Proceedings as to findings.—When the record is silent upon the subject, it will be presumed that the proceedings in respect to the preparation and filing of findings were regular.¹⁴ In the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that the appellant waived service upon him of proposed findings.¹⁵ And where the findings and judgment are filed upon the same day, it will be presumed the findings were first filed.¹⁶

§ 511. Construction of Findings.—Since all presumptions are in favor of the findings of the trial court, an appellate court in reviewing the findings will give them a liberal construction in support of the judgment.¹⁷ Any uncertainties in the findings are to receive such construction as will uphold rather than defeat the judgment,¹⁸ as will give them effect rather than destroy them.¹⁹ All the findings are to be read together, and must be reconciled to prevent any conflict upon material points, if such reconciliation is possible.²⁰ In reviewing the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment, regard will be had to the ultimate facts found, and not to mere probative facts, which are not shown by the findings to be the only facts proved, and from which alone the court finds the ultimate facts. will not prevent the ultimate facts from controlling.¹ And whenever the facts found are such as might authorize different inferences therefrom, it will be presumed that the inference made by the trial court was one that will uphold rather than defeat the judgment.² In such case the appellate court will not draw from those facts any inference of fact contrary to that which might have been drawn by the trial court for the purpose of rendering its judgment.³

§ 512. Relation of Findings to Issues.—In the absence of an assignment of error that the trial court failed to find upon a material issue, it will be presumed that the findings cover all the issues.⁴ Where it is contended that there is no finding upon an issue made by the pleadings, and the record does not show the evidence given on the trial, it will not be presumed, against the correctness of the judgment, that any evidence was given thereon.⁵ But it will be presumed that no evidence was introduced which was responsive to such issue, or that the claim of the party on that issue was abandoned on the trial.⁶ This rule applies not only to issues that are made to the allegations of the complaint by the answer, but also to the issues made by the averment of new matter in the answer.⁷ But it can have no application to a failure to make a finding upon a material issue when the court gives as a reason therefor that the finding was immaterial.⁸

Findings outside the issues.—As against a contention that certain findings are not within the issues, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence, that facts found which might have been presented in a case by formal pleadings were supported by evidence introduced by the parties under stipulation, or at least without objection.⁹

Upon an appeal on the judgment-roll alone, it will be presumed from a general finding upon an issue that the parties treated the answer as sufficient to raise such an issue.¹⁰ But consent to try outside issues will not be presumed where the evidence on such issues is admissible as tending to prove facts in issue.¹¹ Moreover, such presumption will not be indulged where it would amount to a presumption of error, as where the objectionable finding is in conflict with the judgment.¹² And it will not be indulged, even in favor of the judgment, when the finding is contrary to facts admitted by the pleadings, as it will not be presumed that evidence was introduced to contradict an admission of record.¹³

On appeal by the plaintiff on the judgment-roll, it was held that it would not be presumed that evidence was introduced without objection to prove the subsequent agreement on which the judgment rested. The court distinguishes Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 10 Pac. 186, on the ground that there was a bill of exceptions in that case, and therefore the court did not rely upon any presumption); Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278; Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468.

§ 513. Implied Findings.—Under the act of 1861 providing in substance that no judgment shall be reversed for want of finding unless exceptions be taken to the want of finding, it was repeatedly held that where the findings were silent as to the material facts necessary to support the judgment and no effort was made to correct them, it would be presumed in aid of the judgment that the necessary facts were proved unless the contrary appeared. The only questions arising upon the findings in such case then were, Are the findings within the issues? And, Are they consistent with the judgment?¹⁴ The code has done away with the doctrine of implied findings as based upon this act. Under the rule established by the Code of Civil Procedure, when the facts are found, it must appear affirmatively that they support the judgment. And where there is no express finding as to an issue, it will not be presumed that a finding thereon was waived.¹⁵ This rule has no application when findings are waived. In that case it will be presumed that the trial court found all matters of fact in issue and necessary to support the judgment in favor of the successful party.¹⁶

§ 514. Presumption as to Sufficiency of Evidence.—It is the duty of an appellant to point out the evidence or lack of evidence showing a finding assailed is unsupported by evidence.¹⁷ Findings not attacked on the ground that they are unsupported by the evidence must be presumed to be true.¹⁸ And in the absence of any transcript of the evidence, or bill of exceptions, and of a specification of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision, when required,¹⁹ it will be presumed that the evidence offered in support of the findings was competent and material to the issues, was received without objection,²⁰ and was sufficient to support the facts found.¹ And it will be further assumed that there was

When the bill of exceptions specifies certain particulars in which it is claimed the findings are unsupported by the evidence, it will be presumed to contain all the evidence in the particulars specified.³ But it will not be presumed to contain any evidence upon points not specified, and the verdict or findings will be presumed to be sustained by the evidence as to such points.⁴

When a verdict or vital finding is based on the testimony of one witness, and this testimony is contradictory, it will be presumed that the trier of fact found some reasonable or legal excuse for the inconsistency and has justification for concluding that upon the whole the witness told the truth.⁵ Upon an appeal from a judgment for the defendant upon the judgment-roll alone, it may be assumed, if necessary, that the plaintiff introduced no evidence upon his cause of action.⁶

In absence of specification of insufficiency.—Where no specification of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings is made in the bill of exceptions, it must be presumed that the findings are supported by the evidence.⁷ The fact that there is some evidence in the record bearing on a finding which is not in itself sufficient to support it cannot be considered, for it is only when the finding is directly challenged in this respect that the appellate court must assume that all the evidence bearing on the subject is in the record.⁸

§ 515. Review of Evidence.—Because of the presumptions in favor of the verdict and findings and judgment, the appellate court when reviewing the evidence in support of a verdict or finding, or, in the absence thereof,

13. The rule that where there are two or more probable causes for the injury sued for, the plaintiff cannot recover if his evidence leaves it just as probable that the injury was the result of a cause not rendering the defendant liable as otherwise, is a rule to guide the jury rather than a rule to guide the appellate court in passing upon the evidence. Peters v. McKay & Co., 136 Cal. 73, 68 Pac. 478; Ross

in cases formerly denominated cases in equity the jury, when called in, acts simply in an advisory capacity, and the court, being compelled to make findings of its own, is free to adopt or reject the findings of the jury as it deems proper, it follows, that in determining whether the findings of the trial court are sustained by the evidence in such cases, it is immaterial that such findings are contrary to the findings of the jury.¹⁴

When the evidence is conflicting, the court will presume that the evidence in support of the verdict or findings is true,¹⁵ and construe it and resolve every substantial conflict as favorable as possible in support thereof.¹⁶ The presumption on appeal is not only in favor of the ultimate fact declared in the findings, but when there are no special findings and it appears that there was a material conflict in the evidence in the court below as to the probative facts essential to be found to support the ultimate fact, the further presumption obtains that the conflict was resolved in such a manner as to sustain the general finding.¹⁷

§ 516. Waiver of Findings.—Upon appeal from the judgment, upon the judgment-roll alone, where no findings appear therein, it cannot be presumed that the mere absence of findings constitutes error. But since findings of fact may be waived, in the absence of some affirmative showing to the contrary, by bill of exceptions or in other appropriate manner, the presumption arises that they were waived,¹⁸ and that the court found all the facts necessary to sustain its judgment.¹⁹ As was said in an early case, a party who comes to the supreme court to say that the court below committed an error in failing to find the facts must, by bill of exceptions or some other similar and appropriate method, make it affirmatively appear by the record that no waiver of findings had in fact occurred in the court below; otherwise the intentment here must go to the support and not to overthrow the judgment therein.²⁰ The rule that the findings will be presumed to have been waived has no application where the only reasonable inference from the record is directly to the contrary, and especially where the record shows that the party moved to vacate the judgment and asked the court to make findings.¹ It cannot, therefore, have force as against a writing clearly intended to be a finding upon a material issue filed by the judge of the court below.²

§ 517. Amount of Recovery.—The law presumes that the award of damages in cases in which there is no accurate standard by which to compute the injury is the result of full and careful deliberation, and prompted by fair and just motives, and this presumption acquires added strength when the trial judge, who has heard all the evidence, reviews the verdict on motion for new trial and declines to disturb it.³ It is not to be presumed that the jury included in their verdict any award for injury concerning which there was no evidence and which was not specifically alleged in the complaint,⁴ or that they regarded an allegation as to damages which, properly, should be rejected as surplusage.⁵ It cannot be assumed that they allowed more upon any particular item than was properly allowable.⁶ Nor can it be presumed from the mere fact that the verdict is not for a large sum of money, that the jury ignored any element of damage. Any such presumption would carry the court into the realm of the most unsatisfactory speculation.⁷

§ 518. Findings of Referee.—The rule of presumptions is applicable to the findings of a referee.⁸ If there is nothing in the record to the contrary, it will be presumed that the findings of a referee were sustained by the evidence.⁹ But the presumption as to waiver of findings applicable to findings of a court¹⁰ can have no application to a report of a referee for the reason that no provision is made for a waiver in such cases.¹¹ Where a large mass of contradictory evidence is reported, it will be presumed in favor of an order setting aside a referee's report on the ground that his findings are against the weight of the testimony, that the court below properly weighed the evidence.¹²

Judgment and Orders Subsequent Thereto.

§ 519. Judgment.—The judgments of superior courts will be presumed regular if there is nothing in the record on appeal to the contrary.¹³ Where there are several causes of action in the complaint, one of which is good, it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that was based upon that which is good.¹⁴ If a judgment can be entered only on order of court, it will be presumed such order was made.¹⁵ If two judgments have been entered in a cause, and the record is silent as to the reason therefor, the latter in point of time must be deemed the true judgment in the case, and it will be presumed that circumstances existed authorizing the court to set the former aside.¹⁶ In the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, it will be presumed in favor of a judgment rendered upon a judgment of a foreign state which does not carry interest that any excess is attributable to costs.¹⁷ Where, in an action to recover specific personal property, judgment is rendered for damages without any judgment for its return, it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of any showing in the record to the contrary, that it was shown at the trial that the property in controversy had been lost or destroyed.¹⁸ And if judgment for possession of such property is rendered without an alternative judgment for damages in case delivery cannot be had, it will be presumed that it appeared at the trial that the plaintiff had already obtained possession of the property.¹⁹

Judgment against sureties.—The entry of judgment against the sureties upon a bond to stay execution is not a special proceeding in favor of which no presumption will be indulged where the jurisdictional facts do not appear on its face, but is part of the procedure in the original action in favor of which all reasonable presumptions will be indulged.²⁰

§ 520. Judgment by Default.—Upon an appeal from a judgment by default, the appellate court must indulge in all reasonable presumptions and intendments in favor of the judgment.¹ A default judgment will be presumed regular although an answer of the defendant appears in the judgment-roll.² If it does not appear that the court received and heard any testimony, it will be presumed that it informed itself as to the matter of complaint in a proper and regular manner.³ Where a motion to strike out an answer and for judgment as by default is based upon all the papers on file, it will be presumed on an appeal upon the judgment-roll that there was something in the papers on file, not a part of the judgment-roll, which warranted a judgment for an amount less than that claimed in the complaint.⁴ So, also, where an answer is on file, it will be presumed in favor of an order denying a motion for judgment by default that the answer was properly on file.⁵

trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision, that the court changed its opinion as to the effect of the evidence and reached a conclusion on the hearing of the motion favorable to the adverse party.¹⁷ The same presumption must be indulged although the motion is heard by a judge who did not try the case, as he by the rules of law occupies the place of the trial judge, and is clothed with all his powers and duties.¹⁸ Where the court denies a motion for new trial made on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and the evidence is not in the record, it must be assumed in support of his order that he was of the opinion the evidence set forth in the affidavits was cumulative.¹⁹

§ 523. Notice of Intention to Make Motion.—The notice of intention to move for a new trial is not a part of the record on appeal, and need not be included therein.²⁰ If the record recites the giving of notice of intention to move for a new trial, it will be presumed the notice was given in due time and that it was in due form.¹ It has several times been contended that an order on motion for new trial cannot be considered because the notice of intention is not in the record, and that the appellate court cannot know upon what grounds the motion was made. While it is necessary that it should in some way be made to appear in the record what the grounds for new trial were, if there is a bill of exceptions containing specifications of insufficiency of evidence and assignments of errors of law, and it appears that the court ruled on the motion as upon the merits, the presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, is that the notice was duly given,² and that the specifications and assignments

conformed to those in the notice and constituted the grounds upon which the court was asked to grant a new trial.³ But where the bill of exceptions contains a purported copy of the notice of intention and such notice designates no proper grounds for the motion, it cannot be presumed in support of an order granting a new trial that another notice designating sufficient grounds was given.⁴

Where the court strikes out a notice of motion for new trial, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing in the record to the contrary, that the moving party consented thereto.⁵ Distinguishable from these cases is that in which it is claimed that it was error to deny a motion for new trial when the record is silent as to the service of notice upon an adverse party and as to his participation in the motion. In such case it will be presumed in support of the order that notice was not given, that the superior court did not have jurisdiction to grant the motion for a new trial, and that said motion was therefore properly denied.⁶

§ 524. Grounds for Order.—When an order granting a new trial is silent as to the ground upon which it is made, and the record shows the existence of a valid ground, it will be presumed that the order was based on that ground.⁷ And where the order is granted upon a discretionary ground, every presumption will be indulged in favor of the proper exercise by the trial court of its judicial discretion.⁸ This presumption obtains even where the order is made by another judge than the one who tried the case.⁹ In the absence of a bill of exceptions showing what papers were used on the motion, it will be presumed that the motion was in part based upon some ground upon which affidavits could be used, that affidavits were in fact used on the hearing, and were sufficient to justify the court in making the order.¹⁰ If one of the grounds for granting a new trial is that the verdict is against law, it will be presumed, in the absence of any instructions appearing in the record, that the verdict is contrary to the instructions actually given.¹¹

If the notice was in fact set forth in the bill of exceptions, and it appeared therefrom that it was either insufficient or was not given within the proper time, it will be assumed that the motion was denied on that ground, unless it appears that the respondent accepted service of either the notice of intention, or of the proposed statement or bill of exceptions, or that he suggested any amendments thereto, or was present at the settlement.¹²

Insufficiency of evidence.—Prior to 1919, it was frequently held that if one of the grounds of a motion for new trial was the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision, and the order did not exclude this from the grounds upon which the order was made, it would be assumed that the order was made on this ground,¹³ provided the statement or bill of exceptions used on such motion contained a specification of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision.¹⁴ This rule, however, was changed by specific statutory enactment in 1919. The provision is as follows:

“When a new trial is granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the order shall so specify; otherwise, on appeal from such order, it will be presumed that the order was not based upon that ground.”¹⁵

§ 525. In General.—Reasonable presumptions also will be indulged in favor of the proceedings in taking an appeal, and of the regularity of official acts relating thereto.¹⁶ Where the record shows the rendition of judgment before the judgment-roll was made up, but does not show the exact date of entry, it will be presumed the judgment was entered before the judgment-roll was made up.¹⁷ An attorney assuming to act for an appellant will be presumed to have authority to do so.¹⁸ Where no

Contents.—It is presumed that the record exhibits all matters material to a consideration of the points presented.⁷ When a bill of exceptions is contained in the record as a part of the judgment-roll, it is presumed to contain all the evidence material to the rulings to which exceptions were reserved and which are specified therein.⁸ This presumption obtains though the record does not state that it contains all the evidence.⁹ In such case an appellate court can no more assume that error appearing therein was cured by some matter not contained in the bill than it can consider matters outside of the record for the purpose of impeaching the correctness of the judgment.¹⁰ It will not, therefore, be presumed that other evidence would support the findings assailed.¹¹ On the contrary, if there was any evidence which would explain or overcome that set forth in the bill, it is the duty of the respondent to cause it to be incorporated therein.¹² It is not presumed, however, that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence upon points not specified.¹³

IV. DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT.

General Principles.

§ 527. Rule Stated.—It is well established that an exercise by a trial court of a discretionary power will not be reviewed or disturbed except for an abuse of discretion.¹⁴ The only limitation that the law has placed upon the exercise of discretionary judicial power is, that it must not be abused.¹⁵ An appellate court will not interfere even though it may doubt the correctness of the ruling of the trial court.¹⁶ Unless it is able to say that a clear abuse of discretion is made to appear, it will not substitute its opinion and thereby divest the trial court of the discretionary power reposed in it.¹⁷

It will be presumed in favor of the action of the court that its discretion was properly exercised, and the burden rests upon the appellant to show an abuse of discretion.¹⁸

§ 528. When is Discretion Abused.—Conceding that a court may deny an application addressed to its judicial discretion, it does not necessarily follow that it is an abuse of discretion to grant the application, for it may often happen that a decision in favor of either party would not appear to be an abuse of discretion. To say that the law allows no latitude for the exercise of discretionary power, is to deny that the power is discretionary.¹⁹ Therefore, it is not sufficient for an appellant complaining of a denial of his application merely to cite to an appellate court cases in which orders granting such motions have been sustained upon appeal.²⁰ An abuse of discretion does not necessarily imply a willful abuse or intentional wrong. In a legal sense, discretion is abused whenever, in its exercise, a court exceeds the bounds of reason,—all the circumstances before it being considered.¹ While it may be difficult to define exactly what is meant by an abuse of judicial discretion, and whatever it may imply as to the disposition and motives of the judge, it is fairly deducible from the cases that one of its essential attributes is that it must plainly appear to effect injustice.² As pointed out in an early case, the discretion to be exercised by a trial court is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion; guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to serve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice. In a plain case this discretion has no office to perform, and its exercise is limited to doubtful cases, where an impartial mind hesitates.³

Application of Rule.

§ 529. Application Generally.—The following matters are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and, in accordance with the rule already stated, the action of the trial court thereon will not be disturbed, unless the record affirmatively shows that its discretion was abused: Applications for change of venue grounded upon the convenience of witnesses;⁴ applications for continuance;⁵ the § 531. Dismissal.—A trial court has general discretionary power without the aid of legislation to dismiss an action for want of prosecution, and the exercise of its discretion in cases not regulated by statute will not be disturbed upon appeal except for an abuse thereof.⁷ No definite and fixed rule can be laid down for the exercise of discretion in the cases not regulated by statute, but discretion should be exercised, under the circumstances of the particular case, in conformity with the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve, and not to impede or defeat, the ends of substantial justice.⁸ Section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure does not divest the trial court of discretionary power to dismiss for failure to issue or serve summons within the time prescribed, but fixes a limit beyond which the discretion ceases and a dismissal becomes mandatory.⁹ Section 583 of the code applies only to delay in bringing the case to trial after answer filed and does not affect the power of the court in other cases.¹⁰

§ 532. Trial.—A trial court has a large discretion as to the conduct of the trial of an action, which will not be disturbed except in extreme cases, when the power of

§ 533. New Trial.—The granting or denial of a new trial is a matter resting so largely in the discretion of a trial court that it will not be disturbed except upon a manifest and unmistakable abuse.⁹ It is especially so when such discretion is used in awarding a new trial which does not finally dispose of the matter.¹⁰ It has been said “that it is only in rare instances and upon very strong grounds that the supreme court will set aside an order granting a new trial.”¹¹ It is true such discretion is not a right to the exercise of the mere personal and arbitrary will of the judge, but is a power governed by fixed rules of law, and to be reasonably exercised within those rules, to the accomplishment of justice. But so long as a case made presents an instance showing a reasonable or even fairly debatable justification, under the law for the action taken, such action will not be set aside, even if, as a question of first impression, the appellate court might feel inclined to take a different view from that of the trial court as to the propriety of its action. More especially is this true where the question rests largely in fact and involves the proper deduction to be drawn from the evidence as to which the opportunities of the trial court for reaching just conclusions in such instances are generally superior to those of the appellate court.¹²

Exception to rule.—But there is an exception to the general rule. Where the motion for new trial is founded entirely upon alleged errors of law in the proceedings of the trial court, and the order for a new trial is granted solely upon that ground, the appellate court will review the action of the trial court as in other cases where questions of law and not matters of mere discretion are involved.¹³

§ 534. For Newly Discovered Evidence—For Excessive Damages.—The granting or refusing of a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is so far within the discretion of the trial court, that its action will not be disturbed except for a manifest abuse of discretion.¹⁴ The ruling of a lower court upon a motion for new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is very rarely interfered with by an appellate court.¹⁵ Newly discovered evidence as a ground for new trial is not regarded with favor,¹⁶ and a refusal to grant a new trial will not be reversed unless it appears that the newly discovered evidence is such as must, if proved upon a new trial, change the result, and proper diligence has been shown in endeavoring to obtain such evidence.¹⁷ It is only where there is an entire want of the showing required on such motion that it can be said as a matter of law that the court abused its discretion in granting the motion.¹⁸

For excessive damages.—A motion for new trial upon the ground of excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice is addressed to the discretion of the trial court,¹⁹ and its action in granting a new trial will not be disturbed unless it appears that the court has abused its discretion.²⁰ The appellate court will not reverse the order merely because it differs with the trial court as to what would have been just compensation, unless the difference of opinion is such as to justify the conclusion that the trial court abused its discretion.¹ And when there is a material conflict of evidence regarding the extent of the damage, the imputation of abuse in granting a new trial is repelled, the same as if the ground of the order were insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict.² The same is true where the evidence, though not conflicting, is such that different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom.³

§ 535. For Insufficiency of Evidence.—Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision is a ground for new trial appealing peculiarly to the discretion of the trial court, and its order either granting or refusing a new trial has not been disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion.⁴ The rule adopted in the appellate court, that the verdict of a jury will not be disturbed on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, unless it appears, without substantial conflict, that there is no evidence to sustain the verdict, has no application to the trial court. The judge of that court has the same opportunity to see the witnesses, to judge of their credibility, and of the degree of weight which ought to be given to their evidence, as the jury has, and is often better qualified to determine these questions than the jury itself.⁵ If there is any appreciable conflict in the evidence, action of the court in granting a new trial is conclusive on the appellate court;⁶ and even where there does not appear to be a conflict in the evidence, the action of the trial court will not be disturbed where there appears to flow from the general surrounding circumstances of the case, probable justification for discrediting or giving no weight to testimony which, on its face, may bear all the earmarks of probability.⁷ The appellate court does not interfere with the action of the trial court in granting a new trial, even when the evidence on which it has acted may consist of depositions and documentary and oral evidence.⁸ However, if, upon undisputed facts found, but one correct conclusion of law is possible and the superior court mistaking the law orders a new trial, its order will be reversed.⁹ So, also, when the testimony is without substantial conflict, and there is no evidence to support the finding or verdict, an order refusing a new trial has been reversed.¹⁰

§ 536. Proceedings on Motion for New Trial.—The discretion of a trial court as to the proceedings on a motion for new trial will not be disturbed except for an abuse thereof. The determination of the question whether there has been due diligence in prosecuting a motion for new trial is largely within the discretion of the trial court, and the action of the court in dismissing a motion for new trial on this ground has not been disturbed, unless its discretion has been abused.¹¹ The terms upon which a court will grant a new trial are peculiarly a matter within its discretion, and wherever the conditions are such that the court is authorized in its discretion to impose terms, the appellate court will interfere only in those cases where it manifestly appears that there has been an abuse thereof;¹² and since it is discretionary with a trial court, in cases in which excessive damages are awarded, and the excess is ascertainable, whether to grant a new trial or direct the excess to be remitted, error cannot be predicated upon the court's refusal to direct such remission.¹³

§ 537. Relieving from Default.—Applications under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and the action of the court thereon will be sustained unless the discretion is palpably and manifestly abused.¹⁴

The rule is equally applicable whether the motion is granted or denied,¹⁵ although the appellate court is much more disposed to affirm an order granting such an application as the result is to compel a trial on the merits than it is when the judgment or order is allowed to stand and it appears that a substantial defense can be made.¹⁶ Notwithstanding this inclination of the courts, however, the rule that the trial court, in cases of doubt, should exercise its discretion in favor of the granting the application is a rule merely for the guidance of the trial court. The sole question for the appellate court to determine is whether the trial court abused its discretion in making the order complained of.¹⁷

§ 538. Appeal.—The determination whether there has been due diligence in taking the necessary steps under section 953a of the Code to secure the filing of a transcript is within the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed by the appellate court unless its discretion is abused; and especially will its action be sustained when it tends to a determination of the appeal upon its merits.¹⁸

Relieving default in presenting bill or statement.—The granting or denial of relief from a noncompliance with the law in the matter of the presentation of a proposed bill of exceptions (or, under the former practice, a statement) on motion for new trial rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed in the absence of a manifest abuse of discretion.¹⁹

V. QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

Introductory.

§ 539. Authority to Review Questions of Fact.—It is the province of an appellate court to decide questions of law,²⁰ to review the action of the court below and correct its errors.¹ An appellate court possesses none of the functions of a jury, and cannot assume to exercise them.² While the question of the sufficiency of the evidence, as a matter of law, to support a verdict or finding may be presented to the appellate court for review, its duty stops when it has determined that there is some substantial evidence to support it. It will not weigh the evidence,³ pass upon the credibility of witnesses,⁴ nor substitute its judgment thereon for that of the trial court, but will uphold the verdict or finding,⁵ even though it would have decided otherwise if it had occupied the place of the trial judge or jury.⁶

Effect of constitutional provision.—The section of the constitution forbidding the reversal of a judgment on certain grounds, unless after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, “the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice,” does not require the court to review the evidence with a view of determining where the preponderance or the weight of the evidence, lies. This provision, so far as appellate courts are concerned, authorizes the review or examination of the evidence, not for the purpose of determining the evidentiary value of the testimony or where the preponderance of the evidence lies, but only for the purpose of determining whether the court may be required to hold that from any error in the misdirection of the jury, or in the admission or exclusion of evidence, or as to any matter of pleading or procedure, a miscarriage of justice has resulted.⁷ Of course, where the testimony upon which a verdict or finding is based is characterized by such inherent weakness as to justify the conclusion that it is insufficient to uphold the verdict or the findings, then a question of law arises, in which case, as in the case of any other question of law, an appellate court may review it.⁸

§ 540. Power to Make Findings and Draw Inferences. The act of drawing a conclusion from the evidence is peculiarly the function of the trial court, and an appellate court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction has power to correct only errors of law and cannot correct errors of fact committed by the trial court.⁹ An appellate court cannot, therefore, determine questions of fact and make findings of fact, although the entire evidence is before it,¹⁰ and although the evidence is clear and convincing.¹¹ It cannot correct a finding of a trial court even though it is undoubted that the defect therein was inadvertent.¹² found or find an ultimate fact from probative facts unless it follows as a conclusion of law.¹³ If the trial court failed to make a finding as to an ultimate fact, the appellate court cannot infer the fact from the facts found, but must reverse the judgment for want of findings unless such ultimate fact necessarily results from the facts found or follows therefrom as a matter of law;¹⁴ that is to say, when the nonexistence of the fact to be inferred, upon every conceivable theory of which the case will admit, is inconsistent with the existence of the facts which are found.¹⁵ Not only is the appellate court itself precluded from inferring the fact in such case, but it is also precluded from directing the trial court to make a finding,¹⁶ and from modifying a judgment where the judgment as modified would not be supported by the findings made and would necessitate the appellate court making other findings.¹⁷

fair and impartial and should be allowed to sit in a cause is a mixed question of law and fact, and the determination of that question against the challenge will be interfered with upon appeal only when the evidence adduced on the voir dire is of such a character that it can be said from it, as a matter of law, that the juror is so prejudiced or biased in the case that he will not be a fair juror.¹⁸ The case must be one in which it is manifest that the law left nothing to the conscience or discretion of the court.¹⁹ A ruling in allowing a challenge will not be reviewed unless it is clearly made to appear that prejudice resulted.²⁰

Credibility of witnesses.—The amount of credit to be given to the positive testimony of a witness is solely a question for the trial tribunal,¹ except, perhaps, where the testimony, in the light of the undisputed facts, is inherently so improbable and impossible of belief as to, in effect, constitute no evidence at all.²

if there is any substantial evidence in support of it.³ Before an appellate court can interfere on the ground of excessive damages, the excess must appear as a matter of law, or be such as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury.⁴ Practically the trial court must bear the whole responsibility in every case. But if the amount of the damages is so obviously disproportionate to the injury proved as to justify the conclusion that the verdict is not the result of the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury, the verdict must be held excessive.⁵

Verdict and Findings.

§ 542. Sufficiency of Evidence.—While an appellant may present to an appellate court the question whether there is any sufficient evidence to support a general verdict or finding,⁷ appellate courts sit to review errors of law, and are without power to make findings of fact, and it is only when the question is presented as one of law that the appellate court will examine it to this sole end. And when it is satisfied that substantial evidence exists to support the verdict or finding, its examination ceases at once.⁸ It must be borne in mind, says Mr. Justice Angellotti, in a recent case, that the question before the court in considering the attack on the verdict of the jury is not how it would find the facts to be, but whether there was enough in the evidence from which the jury might find the existence of facts which would justify the verdict they rendered. Was there substantial evidence in support thereof? If so, the verdict must stand, however strongly such evidence may be opposed to other evidence given on the trial. In cases of mere conflict of evidence the conclusions of the trial jury and judge are conclusive on the question as to which side produced the preponderance of evidence.⁹

To render a verdict or make a finding upon an issue upon which there is a total want of evidence is an error at law which may be reviewed upon appeal.¹⁰ The jurisdiction of the appellate court, however, is not confined to cases in which there is no evidence of a material fact, but includes those cases also in which there is some evidence but not enough to sustain the verdict.¹¹ An appellate court, therefore, can set aside a verdict or finding for want of evidence when there is no evidence to support it, or when the supporting evidence is so weak as to show an abuse of discretion, and in these cases only.¹² The rule is equally applicable to the verdict of a jury and to the findings of a court sitting as a jury,¹³ and to verdicts on the first trial or upon successive trials.¹⁴

This rule has been variously expressed in the cases. For example, it has been said that it is only in cases where there is no evidence to sustain a finding or where it can be said as a matter of law that the evidence is insufficient to sustain it that the appellate court can consider the evidence.¹⁵ Again, it has been held that whether or not the evidence is insufficient to sustain a decision of a court is a question which will not be looked into on appeal further than to see if there is some evidence tending to support it.¹⁶ So, also, it has been held that a verdict or finding will not be disturbed if it is supported by some evidence,¹⁷ by any evidence,¹⁸ by slight

a particular matter is required by law to be clear, satisfactory and convincing. Whether the evidence in any particular case is of this character must be determined by the trial court, and its determination thereon will be accepted by the appellate court as conclusive, if there be substantial evidence to support it.⁶

§ 543. Upon Conflicting Evidence.—A judgment cannot be reversed because the evidence is conflicting.⁷ On the contrary, the rule is established by a host of decisions that an appellate court will not disturb a verdict of a jury or findings of a court when there is a substantial conflict of evidence on material points and when there is some evidence to support the verdict or findings.⁸

flict is conclusive, and not subject to review;¹⁸ the appellate courts have no power to interfere with the finding on conflict of testimony.¹⁹ These expressions, say the court of appeals in a recent case, are not wholly accurate. It is true that there is nothing in the constitution or statutes prohibiting appellate courts from reviewing questions of fact, and there is no doubt that technically the appellate courts have power to interfere with a finding of fact that is supported by substantial evidence or set it aside when it appears reasonably certain that said finding or verdict is wrong.²⁰

The reason for the rule, then, is not the want of authority, but in part rests upon the fact that the appellate court is cut off from the only means through which a decision can be intelligently reached in such cases, namely, the appearance and general bearing of witnesses.¹ This, however, is not the only reason of the rule, for it is well settled that the rule is applicable also where the evidence is documentary and the appellate court has an equal opportunity with the trial court to determine its credibility.² A further reason for the rule is founded on the essential distinction between the trial and appellate courts under our system and grows out of considerations of jurisdiction. It is the province of the trial court to find questions of fact, and of the appellate court to review errors of law. The appellate court has no power to make findings. That power is vested exclusively in the trial court, and every litigant has the right to insist that the verdict of a jury or the finding of the trial court, when based upon sufficient evidence, shall be absolutely controlling without inference by the appellate court.³

§ 545. Character of Conflict.—The conflict in the evidence precluding an appellate court from disturbing a verdict or finding, within the rule, must be a real and substantial conflict upon material points, not a mere pretense thereof, or a conflict that does not relate to controlling issues.⁴ It must be such a substantial variance in the evidence adduced on both sides of a litigated question of fact as will sustain the determination of the jury or the lower court, no matter which way it may find therefrom.⁵ As was said in a recent case: A finding against the great weight and preponderance of evidence can be maintained on the doctrine of "conflict" only where the alleged conflict rests upon evidence, either direct or circumstantial, which so materially contradicts the testimony on the other side, or is so radically inconsistent with it, as to leave room in a fair and reasonable mind to find the fact the other way.⁶ Therefore, to say that a finding cannot be disturbed because the evidence to sustain it as found is substantially conflicting is also to say that, if the finding was the other way, the same substantial conflict would equally preclude its disturbance by the appellate court.⁷ The conflict may be raised by facts and circumstances tending to contradict the direct evidence of a witness, though some of the evidence is inadmissible, but was admitted without objection or without sufficient objection.⁸ And since under the code the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient to prove any fact except perjury or treason, such evidence is necessarily sufficient to create a substantial conflict in the evidence regardless of the number of witnesses or the inferences supporting their testimony to the contrary.⁹

§ 546. Application of Rule.—This rule as to conflict applies to conflicting expert testimony.¹⁰ And it applies with the same force to conflict between the testimony of witnesses for one party as it does to like conflict between witnesses of the respective parties.¹¹

The same rules with reference to balancing conflicting testimony govern the appellate court in probate cases,¹² and in cases formerly denominated cases in equity as in law cases. Under our system, in actions equitable in nature, the witnesses are examined in open court and minutes of the testimony taken as in actions at law. The record is brought up in the same mode as in actions at law. The court below is possessed of all the aids necessary to enable it to give due credit to every item of testimony which is accessible to the judge who tries an action at law, and which, from the nature of things, is inaccessible to the appellate court. For these reasons, if for no other, there would be no propriety in making a distinction between the two classes of cases.¹³ The rule applies also to a report of commissioners to assess damages from widening of a street,¹⁴ to a decision of a referee,¹⁵ to an order upon motion for new trial,¹⁶ and to other cases.¹⁷

§ 547. Where Evidence is Documentary.—It has been contended that the rule of “conflict” does not apply where the evidence is documentary, and that in such case the appellate court should weigh and measure it by the same standard that the trial court is required to apply. But in view of the fact that one of the reasons for the rule is

13. Under the old chancery practice, the testimony was taken by deposition, generally before a master or a commissioner, and reduced to writing. When the testimony had all been filed, the case was argued upon it before the proper court, and on appeal the entire evidence was before the chancellor or appellate court in the same form in which it was presented to the court below. The appellate court had the same means of determining the credibility of witnesses as the court below. But it is not so under our system as pointed out in the text. Doe v. Vallejo, 29 Cal. 385 (per Sawyer, J.).

Even in an equity case, in which a jury has been impaneled, the findings of the court are as conclusive as if no jury had been called, and the appellate court will not, in case of conflict between the findings of the trial court and of the jury, proceed to weigh the evidence and decide whether it preponderates in favor of the findings of the court or of the jury. *Stockman v. the essential distinction between the trial and appellate courts as to their functions to decide questions of fact, such a contention is untenable, and it has been so held.¹⁸ Therefore, in consideration of an appeal from an order made upon affidavits, which involves the decision of a question of fact, the appellate court is governed by the same rule which controls it where oral testimony is presented for review. If there is any conflict in the affidavits, those in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true, and the facts therein stated must be taken as established.¹⁹ It has been suggested, however, the appellate

§ 548. Where Evidence on One Side Consists of Presumption.—The rule under discussion is applicable where the evidence of the plaintiff upon an issue consists merely of a disputable presumption, as, for example, where the sole evidence of a consideration for a note sued on, is the presumption arising from its execution. In such case when the court finds in favor of the presumption, the presumption furnishes sufficient evidence for the finding of the court on that issue, and the finding is conclusive on the appellate court.¹ The general rule that as against a proved fact, or a fact admitted, a disputable presumption has no weight, is subject to the exception that where an endeavor is made to establish a fact contrary to the presumption, the fact in dispute still remains to be determined upon a consideration of all the evidence including the presumption.² The jury or the trial court sitting as

§ 549. Upon Evidence Subject to Different Inferences. Though there is no conflict in the evidence, if the inferences fairly deducible therefrom are such that different conclusions might rationally be drawn therefrom by men equally sensible and impartial, the conclusion reached by the jury, or the court sitting as such, should be deemed final and not disturbed on appeal for want of sufficient evidence to justify the verdict or findings.⁴ In such case the decision of the trial court or the jury is as conclusive as where the conflict arises directly from the evidence.⁵ If a finding of fact is based upon a reasonable inference, it is not within the power of an appellate court to set it no conflict arises but the presumption is simply overcome and dispelled. The supreme court, however, denying a rehearing, held that there was no "presumption" in the case but an "inference" which the jury might draw). As to presumptions, see EVIDENCE.

aside any more than it is within its power to set aside any other finding supported by sufficient legal evidence. Such a finding is as completely a finding based upon good and sufficient evidence as any other finding of fact, and can be reviewed and set aside as a matter of law only when not sustained by adequate legal evidence.⁶ An appellate court cannot review a finding, because in its judgment the inference induced by the trial court is improbable, or more unlikely to be untrue than the opposite one.⁷ The court's duty begins and ends, says the court in a recent case, with the inquiry whether the trial court had before it evidence upon which an unprejudiced mind might reasonably have reached the same conclusion which was reached.⁸ This rule is applicable also where the parties stipulate to the probative facts, and different inferences may reasonably be drawn from the agreed facts.⁹

§ 550. Against Weight of Evidence.—No rule of appellate practice is more firmly settled than that the weight of evidence is for the jury or the court passing on the facts, and that, as a general rule, an appellate court does not pass upon the weight or preponderance of evidence.¹⁰

The appellate court is not concerned with the question of the preponderance of the evidence, or the substantial character of the showing made by the defendant, but only with the single inquiry, Does the record contain any evidence tending to support the finding assailed?¹¹ Whenever the question is raised on appeal as to the side on which the evidence preponderates, and there is testimony supporting the conclusion of the jury or the findings of a trial court, which testimony is not inherently improbable, the answer must always be that the jury or the trial court has conclusively decided the question. In other words, the preponderance of the evidence in such case must always be held by a reviewing court to be with the victorious party in the court below.¹² The mere fact that the testimony is all one way does not require a reversal of a verdict or finding against such testimony, as the court or jury have the right to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and reject their testimony even though not discredited by direct testimony.¹³ While, as a general rule, the uncontradicted testimony of a witness to a particular fact may not be disregarded, this rule has exceptions, and an appellate court cannot control the conclusion of the court or jury in denying the testimony credence, unless it appears that there are no matters or circumstances at all impairing its accuracy.¹⁴

Yet, as in the case above, where one side of an issue is clearly, amply and firmly established by an unbroken line of evidence, and the jury find the other way upon no evidence that is really and substantially conflicting, or upon a mere pretense of such evidence, or upon evidence so slight as to leave no room to doubt that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice, the finding should not be allowed to stand.¹⁵ Where there is really no substantial evidence to support a verdict, or the jury were evidently actuated by motives which they had no right to consider, the verdict is unwarranted as a matter of law, even though there may be some slight pretense of evidence to support it.¹⁶ This is the case when the only testimony supporting the verdict or finding is so obviously false or so inherently improbable as to require its rejection.¹⁷ The record, however, must show a great pre-

§ 551. Limitation on Rule.—While a verdict or finding may be set aside upon appeal where the evidence in support of it is inherently improbable,¹⁹ to warrant an appellate court in determining that there is no substantial evidence because of such improbability, there must exist either a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or a state of facts so clearly apparent that nothing need be assumed nor any inferences drawn to convince the ordinary mind of the falsity of the story. The appellate court will not indulge in lengthy and dubious computations, nor seek far for a reason to determine that witnesses have committed perjury. It is the duty of the court to harmonize apparent inconsistencies in the statements, if possible, and to do this it will indulge in every reasonable presumption of fact.²⁰ The appellate court must be careful not to give to dogmatic and undemonstrated conclusions respecting natural laws precedence over testimony of apparently credible witnesses, and the mere improbability of the story of the witness does not justify setting aside the verdict or finding.¹

§ 552. Findings of Referee or Commissioner.—The code provides that the finding of a referee or commissioner upon the whole issue must stand as the finding of the court, and upon filing of such finding with the clerk of the court judgment may be entered thereon in the same manner as if the action had been tried by the court.² The uniform practice is to enter judgment on the report the same as on the verdict of a jury. The decision of a referee upon a question of fact will then be regarded on appeal as conclusive as the verdict of a jury, and will not be disturbed if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence upon which it is based.³ A finding of a referee will not be disturbed for insufficiency of the evidence, where it is conflicting, confused and uncertain, if there is any evidence to support it.⁴

Orders.

§ 553. In General.—It is well established that an appellate court reviewing orders of trial courts will not disturb the implied findings of fact made by the court in support of its order, any more than it will interfere with express findings upon which a final judgment is predicated. When the evidence is conflicting, it will be presumed that the court found every fact necessary to support its order that the evidence would justify. So far as the court has passed upon the weight of evidence or the credibility of witnesses, its implied findings are conclusive,⁵ even when based upon conflicting affidavits⁶ and when the conflict is not sharp, but only such as to create an uncertainty in the mind of the judge.⁷ This rule has been applied to the following orders: An order upon a motion for change of venue;⁸ an order upon a motion to

§ 554. Orders on Motion for New Trial.—It is a cardinal doctrine of appellate courts that where upon a question of fact the testimony in the trial court involves a substantial conflict, the action of the court in granting or denying a new trial upon the ground that the verdict or findings are not supported by the evidence will not be disturbed. The granting or refusing of a new trial in such case rests so fully in the discretion of the trial court that its action is conclusive upon the appellate court, unless its discretion appears to have been abused.¹⁵ The

that it is clearly against the weight of the evidence, set it aside and grant a new trial. The judge of the superior court is in a position to judge between the apparent and the real, to detect the fallacy of specious testimony which may have misled the jury, but which his wider experience enables him to readily comprehend. Like considerations apply to cases tried by the court without the intervention of a jury. In the hurry of a trial, or in the disposition of cases, deductions of fact and conclusions of law may be indulged which, on maturer reflection, do not commend themselves to its judgment. A wide discretion is accorded to trial courts in the disposition of motions for new trials, where questions as to the sufficiency of evidence are involved, and its action thereon, either in granting or denying the motion, will not, ordinarily, be disturbed.¹⁶ If a new trial is refused, the evidence in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true, as well as all reasonable inferences deducible therefrom, and if two or more inferences may reasonably arise, that most favorable to the prevailing party must be taken.¹⁷ The denial of a new trial gives added weight to the verdict of the jury if that is possible, the presumption in that case being that the opinion of the judge and jury harmonize in support of the verdict.¹⁸

Since the rule is based upon the essential distinction between trial and appellate courts, the power of the appellate court in this respect is not enlarged by reason of the fact that the judge who passed upon the motion for new trial did not preside at the trial and for that reason declined to review the evidence.¹⁹

VI. SUCCESSIVE APPEALS AND LAW OF THE CASE.

§ 555. In General.—As has already been seen, when an appeal has been determined and the cause has been remanded to the trial court either for entry of a particular judgment or for trial, an appeal may be taken from the judgment entered pursuant to the direction of the appellate court, or from judgments and orders rendered on such further proceedings as may be had.²⁰ On such subsequent appeal, the scope of the review may be limited by the doctrine of the law of the case. The term “law of the case” is a phrase which has been formulated to give expression to the rule that the final judgment of the highest court upon a question of law arising between the parties to an action upon a given state of facts establishes the rights of the parties to that controversy, and is a final determination thereof, and, like a final judgment in any other case, estops the parties thereto from afterwards questioning its correctness.¹ Where upon an appeal the supreme court, in deciding the appeal, states in its opinion a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal, and this although in its subsequent consideration the court may be clearly of the opinion that the former decision is erroneous in that particular.² While a previous ruling by an appellate court upon a point distinctly made may be only authority in other cases, to be followed and affirmed, or to be modified or overruled according to its intrinsic merits, in the case in which it is made it is more than authority; it is a final adjudication from the consequences of which the court cannot depart, nor the parties relieve themselves.³

Altschul v. Doyle, 48 Cal. 535; Rice v. Cunningham, 29 Cal. 492; Austin v. Gagan, 3 Cal. Unrep. 533, 30 Pac. 790; Gutierrez v. Brinkerhoff, 2 Cal. Unrep. 232, 1 Pac. 482; Miller v. Logan, 32 Cal. App. 28, 161 Pac. 1022; Whitaker v. California Door Co., 7 Cal. App. 757, 95 Pac. 910.

So when a case once decided and remanded for further proceedings is again brought before the court upon substantially the same facts, the court is precluded, by this doctrine of the law of the case, from reconsidering the questions of law presented and determined on the former appeal,⁴ even though it may be of the opinion that the former decision is erroneous;⁵ it can only discuss such assignments of error as present questions arising on the last trial,⁶ or new questions not decided on the former appeal.⁷ The decision is binding upon the court which rendered it, although the personnel of the court may have changed since the first appeal. Litigants are not allowed to speculate on chances from changes in the membership of the courts.⁸ Indeed, if this were not the law, the interposition of a new judge might change the law which has been settled by the majority for years.⁹ Not only is the decision binding on the appellate court which rendered it, but it is also binding upon another appellate court to which the case may be subsequently appealed.¹⁰ This rule as to the

The doctrine of the law of the case could not prevent the appellate court from fully investigating and deciding the second appeal to the extent of modifying or wholly changing its former decision if it was satisfied that an error had been committed. § 556. Reason of Rule.—Different reasons have been given by the courts for the doctrine of the law of the case. The reason for the rule is said in some of the cases to rest upon the doctrine of res judicata;¹⁶ in others, upon the want of the power of the appellate court, when the case has gone from its jurisdiction, to annul or reverse its judgment or decree for any error of law or fact,¹⁷ or upon the necessity for the rule as a matter of public policy.¹⁸ The supreme court has no appellate jurisdiction over its own judgments; it cannot review or affirm them after the case has once passed, by the issuance of the remittitur, from its control.¹⁹ It construes, for example, a written contract, and determines the rights and obligations of the parties thereunder, and upon such construction it affirms the judgment of the court below. The decision is no longer open for consideration; whether right or wrong, it has become the law of the case. So, on the other hand, if upon the construction of the contract supposed, the judgment of the court below is reversed and a new trial ordered, the decision is equally conclusive as to the principles which shall govern on the retrial; it is just as final to that extent as a decision directing a particular judgment to be entered is as to the character of the judgment. The court cannot recall the case and reverse its decision after the remittitur is issued. It has determined the principles of law which shall govern, and having thus determined, its jurisdiction in that respect is gone. And if the new trial is had in accordance with its decision, no error can be alleged in the action of the court below.²⁰ Again, if it were not for this salutary rule, litigation might go on indefinitely to the great detriment, not only of the parties concerned, but of the public.¹

§ 557. Necessity for Identity of Facts.—One of the principles upon which the doctrine of the law of the case rests is that of estoppel by judgment. In view of this principle, it follows that it is only the matters which are actually adjudged or determined as the basis of the judgment of the appellate court that can be considered as the law of the case, and that when the judgment or determination is made upon a certain state of facts, it ceases to be of binding force if the facts presented upon a subsequent appeal are essentially different. In that event, the questions raised on the subsequent appeal will be open, and the court can and will decide the case on its merits unembarrassed by any views expressed on the former opinion.² As was stated in an early case, when a decision relates to a matter of fact, the doctrine of the law of the case can be invoked only when the fact appears again to the appellate court under the same circumstance in respect to which it was originally considered.³ On the second trial there may be material changes in the pleadings,⁴ or in the evidence,⁵ or in the findings.⁶ In either case, the decision on the former appeal would not be binding on the second appeal as the law of the case. When new issues are made involving the finding of facts which could not be found under the pleadings which went to the supreme court, as to such new fact, the opinion on the former appeal stands upon the same footing as if it were given in another case.⁷ So, also, where an appeal is based on inferences from the absence of findings, the decision is not binding on a subsequent appeal where the trial is limited to a review of the action of the court upon the grounds upon which the new trial was asked, it is not required to determine what is the law of the case on a former appeal from a judgment rendered on sustaining a demurrer to a complaint, or from an order granting a new trial after a judgment of nonsuit, as this question has no relevancy in determining whether the court erred in committing error in admitting or excluding evidence, or made its findings without sufficient evidence to support them); *Sharon v. trial court has made express findings to the contrary.⁸ On the other hand, however, an immaterial difference in the facts which does not change the rights of the parties in any degree does not render the doctrine inapplicable,⁹ and the decision on the former appeal is conclusive where the only difference between the original and amended complaint consists in the greater particularity in which the latter sets forth the facts alleged in the former,¹⁰ or, generally, where the amendment to the complaint states no new facts and adds nothing material to the pleading.¹¹ But the mere fact that the additional evidence on the second trial is cumulative is not ground for disregarding it, where the manner and bearing of witnesses are involved. When a decision on a former appeal as to the insufficiency of evidence to justify a decision has reference to questions of fact depending upon the credit to be given a witness or upon inferences of fact, and the trial court on the second trial makes the same findings, its decision will not be disregarded upon second appeal, where additional cumulative evidence was offered on the second trial.¹²

§ 558. Examining Record to Ascertain Identity of Facts.—In determining whether a decision on a former appeal is binding as the law of the case, the appellate court may examine the record thereon to ascertain if the facts on both appeals are the same and also what was there decided,¹³ but it cannot consider the former record for any other purpose unless it is so stipulated by the parties.¹⁴ It is not the duty of the appellate court, however, to compare the two records to ascertain the identity of the evidence, when the cause was retried upon amended pleadings, and it is not apparent that the evidence on the two trials was identical.¹⁵ If, upon the second trial, the court below finds the facts to be different from the facts found at the first trial, the appellate court must be guided by the facts found if there is some evidence in support of them. It would not be justified in reviewing the record of the first trial to ascertain the relative weight of the proof and whether the trial court found correctly.¹⁶

§ 559. Decisions Within the Rule Generally.—To be binding as the law of the case it is, of course, necessary that the opinion on the former appeal be binding as a decision of the court.¹⁷ It follows that opinions not concurred in by the requisite number of justices do not become binding as law of the case.¹⁸ Upon the same principle, statements on a former appeal not concurred in by a majority of the court are not law of the case.¹⁹ It is necessary also that the former decision be made in the same case in which the question is raised,²⁰ for, as was said above, in other cases, a decision is only authority to be followed and affirmed, or to be modified or overruled according to its intrinsic merits.¹ It has been contended that the doctrine has no application to an action of ejectment, but this contention was held untenable, as the question is not what is the effect of a judgment in ejectment when recovered, but what effect is to be given to the decision of the appellate court upon the second trial or appeal in the same case. It follows that the object for which the action is brought is immaterial as affecting the application of the doctrine of the law of the case.² Neither is it necessary that the judgment appealed from be one on the merits of the case. A decision rendered upon a demurrer to the complaint upon a former appeal is the law of the case on an appeal taken after a trial on the merits, when the facts found are substantially the same as those alleged in the complaint.³ But, of course, the decision is only law of the case as to what was actually adjudicated.⁴ Therefore, a decision upon an order granting a temporary injunction determining that the complaint, assuming its allegations to be true, is sufficient to support the injunction, would be law of the case on a subsequent appeal as to the sufficiency of the complaint. But such decision does not determine anything as to the merits of the case and does not conclude the court on a determination of the case on its merits.⁵ When a decision operates as a judgment, it becomes the law of the case whether it is rendered upon full argument and consideration or otherwise. When a case is relied on as authority in other cases, this factor may be important, but it is otherwise when the doctrine of law of the case is involved.⁶

Ambiguity.—The conclusiveness of a decision is, however, impaired by ambiguity in its terms. Where the decision of the appellate court on a former appeal by inadvertence determines two principles of law standing in such opposition to each other as to be incapable of a harmonious construction, effect can be given to neither principle upon a subsequent appeal and the law of the case is not established.⁷

§ 560. Decision of Court of Last Resort.—The doctrine that a previous ruling has become the law of the case has no application except as to the decisions of appellate courts.⁸ The doctrine clearly has no application to rulings of trial courts. If at the trial of a cause the court makes a ruling upon a certain point, the court is not bound by it if the same point arises again. On the contrary, the court may, and should, change its ruling if, in the meantime, it has become satisfied that it was erroneous.⁹ But conceding that the doctrine of the case applies only to decisions of a court of last resort, when an appellant ceases to pursue his appeal from one appellate court to a higher, though he might do so, the decision of the court where he sees fit to rest is a final one within the meaning of the rule.¹⁰ Such a decision is not only binding on the intermediate appellate court when the case is again brought before it,¹¹ but it is also binding on the supreme court if the case is subsequently appealed to that court.¹²

§ 561. Erroneous Decision.—While there is some conflict of authority elsewhere as to whether an erroneous decision is binding as the law of the case, the rule is well established in California that it is immaterial whether the decision on the first appeal is erroneous. Right or wrong, it must be regarded as a final adjudication of the court and the law of the case when the case comes up on second appeal on the same facts.¹³ Indeed, it is when the former rule is deemed erroneous that the doctrine of the law of the case becomes most important.¹⁴ Accordingly, it has been said that the doctrine of the law of the case presupposes error in the enunciation of a principle applicable to the facts of a case under review by an appellate tribunal. It presupposes error because, if the governing principle of law had been correctly declared, there would be no occasion for the invocation of the doctrine. The sole reason for the existence of the doctrine is that the court having announced a rule of law applicable to a retrial of the facts, both parties upon that retrial are assumed to have conformed to the rule and to have offered their evidence under it. Under these circumstances it would be a manifest injustice to either party to change the rule upon the second appeal.¹⁵ It must not be thought from this statement that the doctrine is confined to cases in which the first decision is erroneous. It goes that far if it becomes necessary to do so, but the last decision would be the same in a case where the first decision was not erroneous. The doctrine means simply this: that the court having once decided the law, and remanded the cause to the lower court for further proceedings in accordance with the law as thus established, and the parties and the lower court having acted in reliance upon the law, the appellate court will not, upon a second appeal, again enter into a consideration of the question, but, if the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, will treat it as settled law, regardless of its accuracy.¹⁶

as to points not tending to the decision of the point upon which the appeal was disposed of.¹⁷ Statements of an appellate court upon points not presented in the record do not have binding force as an adjudication of the law of the case, even though they are asserted and argued by counsel.¹⁸ In accordance with this rule, an appellate court is not bound by any discussion, on a former appeal, as to the weight and effect of certain evidence which would have been admissible had the party taken issue on new matter presented in a pleading, or by statements made with respect to probative facts tending to establish, modify or overcome ultimate facts admitted on the record, as such discussion and statements are clearly obiter.¹⁹ So, also, it seems that the doctrine of the law of the case is not applicable to statements which, though not obiter in a strict sense, are closely allied thereto, such as statements casually made as to other portions of the case not under consideration at the time they are made.²⁰ On the other hand, the supreme court has refused to adopt the rule which confines the law of the case to that portion of the opinion of the appellate court which can be said to be strictly essential to the disposition of the case.¹ Indeed, it has been held that a decision upon a point which arises in a case and is decided is not a dictum, although it is not necessary to the decision of the appeal,² or that, at least, an opinion made in deciding a point argued by counsel but not necessary to the disposition of the case, if dictum at all, is a judicial as distinguished from obiter dictum.³ Accordingly, when a reversal is placed on several grounds, any one of which is sufficient to warrant a reversal, the decision is the law of the case upon all the grounds upon which it is based. Indeed, a contention that the decision is obiter as to any one ground is equally applicable to the others.⁴ Finally, a party who requests the court to pass upon a point will not be heard afterwards to assert that the decision was dictum, even though the question was not necessarily involved.⁵

§ 563. Parties Concluded.—In actions in personam, a decision of a court of appeal is conclusive upon parties to the appeal whose rights have been determined, but it is not conclusive upon persons not parties to the appeal whose rights are not passed upon. Thus, where the property of an indorser of a note is wrongfully taken and sold under an execution against the principal debtor, and the indorser brings an action for damages against the principal debtor and the persons who wrongfully caused his property to be taken and sold, a decision upon an appeal by the principal debtor that, as he was not a party to the seizure, the indorser had only a right of contribution against him, is not the law of the case so as to preclude a recovery of damages against the remaining defendants who had wrongfully seized the property and whose rights were not considered or passed upon on the former appeal.⁶ A decision of an appellate court cannot be conclusive in a different case with different parties. As to such parties a decision is only authority to be followed and affirmed, or modified or overruled according to its intrinsic merits.⁷ Actions in rem, however, seem to be governed by a somewhat distinct principle. The construction of a will made on an appeal from a decree of partial distribution is rendered in a proceeding and is binding upon all the parties in the matter of the construction to be given the will. Thus, a construction of a will on such an appeal taken by a grantee of a claimant thereunder is binding upon the claimant as the law of the case, and also upon his successors in interest when the same question is presented by them on an appeal from a final decree of distribution, and this notwithstanding the fact that the claimant and his successors in interest were not parties to the first appeal.⁸

§ 564. Questions Concluded Generally.—A decision is the law of the case only as to the questions actually or impliedly determined and decided by the appellate court. No point in a case can be said to have been decided except the one specifically dealt with and such others as may be said to be necessarily determined by the decision of the point under discussion.⁹ It is necessary, therefore, in each particular case to examine the record on the former appeal to ascertain what was there decided.¹⁰ When, for example, several errors are assigned as grounds for reversal, and the appellate court in reviewing the cause comments and passes on certain errors only, and finds them sufficient to warrant a reversal, its decision is law of the case as to the errors actually passed on only, and not as to the other errors assigned but not considered. Therefore, instructions objected and excepted to on the former trial which were not commented on in the opinion on the first appeal reversing the judgment may be considered on a second appeal if given on the second trial and properly brought up for review.¹¹ When, however, a particular objection has been urged on several appeals taken in a cause without receiving any notice, it may be assumed that the point has been considered and decided adversely, for if the point had been good, it would undoubtedly have been noticed.¹² On the other hand, when, instead of reversing the judgment of the court below, the appellate court affirms it, the decision necessarily determines that none of the errors assigned warrants a reversal, and precludes a subsequent review of all such errors.¹³ So, also, when a motion to dismiss an appeal is based upon several grounds, an order overruling the motion is a decision that none of the grounds set up was fatal to the appeal. Even though all the grounds were not argued or directly passed on, the decision necessarily involves and determines all of them.¹⁴

§ 565. Questions of Law and Fact.—Since it is not within the province of an appellate court to make findings of fact, it follows that the doctrine of the law of the case is limited to questions of law and has no application to questions of fact.¹⁵ For example, where in an action of forcible entry and detainer it is held, as a question of fact, that the possession of the plaintiff was as the agent of another and not in his own right, and, as a principle of law from this fact, that the possession of the agent is the possession of the principal for the purpose of the action, and that the action should have been brought in the name of the latter, the determination of this principle of law becomes the law of the case, but the question of fact whether or not the plaintiff was the agent of a third party is liable to be changed by further evidence showing a true and different state of facts. The action of the appellate court upon this question of fact does not operate as a bar or estoppel upon the plaintiff from showing the true facts of the case.¹⁶ The doctrine of the law of the case is applicable to all questions of law, whatever may be their character.¹⁷ It applies to controverted questions of abstract law,¹⁸ and also to questions of a public nature involving great interests; as, for example, the construction of an act of Congress. While the importance of the questions involved should induce a careful consideration in the first instance, it can have no effect upon the conclusiveness of the decision when made.¹⁹ Accordingly, the decisions of the following questions have been held to be binding as law of the

§ 566. Error Existing but not Presented or Considered. The doctrine of the law of the case is limited to decisions upon questions which were actually presented and considered upon the former appeal, and does not extend to points of law which might have been raised but were not presented and determined.⁹ The doctrine does not extend to new points presented upon a second appeal,¹⁰ and particularly to points upon which the court on the former appeal expressly declined to pass,¹¹ or as to which it withdrew any opinion it may have expressed.¹² Such questions are open and may be urged and reviewed upon a subsequent appeal. Upon this principle, a decision upholding the validity of an instrument as against a specific objection is not the law of the case in respect to its validity and sufficiency in other particulars not raised or considered on the former appeal.¹³ Again, since ordinarily, a respondent is only interested on an appeal in upholding the judgment appealed from, and is not entitled to present for consideration errors committed by a trial court, the decision of the appeal does not, on a subsequent appeal from a judgment entered against him in pursuance to the mandate of the appellate court, preclude him from presenting for review exceptions taken by him on the trial of the action.¹⁴ This rule is subject to an apparent exception where the court on the former appeal must necessarily have passed on a particular question, though not expressly presented or considered. For example, since a court must determine that it has jurisdiction of a case before it can pass upon the merits thereof, a court of review must be presumed to have considered this question when it has entertained a case and reversed it on the merits, and the question of lack of jurisdiction cannot afterwards be presented for consideration, even though it may not actually have been considered on the former appeal.¹⁵ So, also, since it is the duty of the court before sustaining an order overruling a general objection to consider not only the particular objections which are urged in support thereof, but also all objections which might have been urged, a decision upholding a pleading or proceeding as against a general objection is law of the case as to all objections which might have been considered, although not in terms referred to.¹⁶

§ 567. Jurisdiction.—The rule of the law of the case extends not only to questions of law arising in a case, but to questions of jurisdiction also, and precludes the court on second appeal from reviewing the question whether it had jurisdiction of the first appeal. And under the rule that the prior decision is the law of the case though it may be erroneous, the prior decision is conclusive upon subsequent proceedings in a case, though the appellate court did not have jurisdiction of the case on the first appeal. Thus, in an early case which arose in the county court, and was appealed to the district court and then to the supreme court, the decision of the supreme court therein was held binding upon the rights of the parties, notwithstanding the fact that it was subsequently decided that the district court had no appellate jurisdiction, and that therefore the supreme court had no jurisdiction of the appeal. It was further held to be immaterial that the question of jurisdiction was not raised and passed on in terms on the appeal, as it must always be implied that a court at the very first decides the question of its jurisdiction, and having entertained the case on its merits, the question of jurisdiction must be considered as having been decided, although not in fact raised or considered.¹⁷

§ 568. Pleadings.—The doctrine of the law of the case is applicable to decisions of questions of law relating to pleadings in civil actions. Accordingly, a decision as to the propriety of the action of a trial court in allowing the filing of an amended complaint¹⁸ or construing the pleadings¹⁹ is the law of the case on a subsequent appeal, the pleadings not being materially changed. The same is true of a decision as to the sufficiency of a complaint to state a cause of action.²⁰ It often happens that more than a single reason may be assigned and urged in support of the general objection that a pleading is bad for paucity of facts. When it is urged on appeal that the trial court erred in overruling such a general objection, it is the duty of the court of review to take up the pleading assailed by its four corners and measure its averments by the full breadth of the objection interposed and then decide, whether for the reason or reasons, or for other reasons not advanced, the general objection is well taken. A decision therefore, that the complaint is sufficient as against the general objection is law of the case as to all the reasons which might have been urged in support of it, notwithstanding the fact that all are not mentioned in the opinion. Nor is it material in this connection that the objection on the former appeal was presented in a different form, as where on the former appeal the objection was urged by an objection to the reception of evidence and on the second appeal by demurrer, for in either case the ultimate question for the determination of the appellate court is the same, namely, the sufficiency of the complaint.¹ Since the question as to the right of the plaintiff to maintain an action may be raised by a general demurrer to the complaint, it follows that a decision upholding a complaint as against a general demurrer is law of the case as to the plaintiff's right to sue.²

law of the case, and is conclusive when the same question is raised on a subsequent appeal.³ So, also, a decision whether the evidence before the trial court was sufficient to justify a decision drawn therefrom conferring or withholding a legal right for either party precludes a review of the question on a second appeal if the evidence is substantially the same.⁴ Accordingly, therefore, if upon the former appeal it is decided that upon the evidence before the court the plaintiff should have had judgment in his favor, that decision is the law of the case upon a subsequent appeal, unless upon the retrial the defendant proves some material fact he omitted to prove on the first trial.⁵ The doctrine is applicable also to the question whether the evidence is sufficient to go to the jury. Thus, where on a review of a ruling on a motion for a nonsuit it is decided that the plaintiff's evidence shows contributory negligence as a matter of law, and that the motion should have been granted, the decision is binding on a subsequent appeal if the evidence for the plaintiff does not warrant a different conclusion.⁶ Of course, if the evidence on the second trial is so distinct as to render the granting of a nonsuit thereat erroneous,

The decision upon the former appeal, therefore, became the law of the case, unless the evidence upon the second trial was so far different as to require a different conclusion."

the doctrine does not apply.⁷ When an appellate court examines the evidence in a case and decides that it is in substantial conflict so as to preclude a disturbance of the finding of the trial court or verdict of the jury, the decision becomes the law of the case, and is binding upon the appellate court when the case is again before it upon the same evidence. The fact that the finding of the trial court or the verdict on the second trial is diametrically opposite the finding on the first trial on the same evidence is immaterial, because to say that a finding cannot be disturbed where the evidence is substantially conflicting is to say that if the finding were the other way, the same conflict would equally preclude its disturbance.⁸

O. DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

I. DECISION IN GENERAL.

§ 570. Scope and Extent.—Section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part as follows:

“The supreme court may affirm, reverse, or modify any judgment or order appealed from, and may direct the proper judgment or order to be entered, or direct a new trial or further proceedings to be had.”⁹

And the constitution, in the creation of district courts of appeal, has expressly provided “that all statutes now in force allowing, providing for or regulating appeals to the supreme court shall apply to appeals to the district court of appeal.”¹⁰ The supreme court or a district court of appeal, therefore, may not only affirm the judg-

The amendment to section 1714 of the Code of Civil Procedure abolishing new trials in probate proceedings except in will contests does not deprive the supreme court of the right to examine the record and direct the lower court to do anything which may be proper in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction. The court upon an appeal from a decree of distribution is not limited, therefore, to discovery of discrepancies between the findings and decree and a modification of the decree to conform to the findings.¹⁷

The decision of the court as to the form of its judgment or mandate, and as to what shall be the future proceedings in the court below, is a part of the duty of the court, and it is presumed to have received the same consideration as any other part of the case.¹⁸

§ 571. Right of Judge not Present at Argument to Participate.—The constitution provides that—

“the concurrence of four justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank; but if four justices, so present, do not concur in a judgment, then all the justices qualified to sit in the cause, shall hear the argument; but to render a judgment a concurrence of four judges shall be necessary.”¹⁹

While this provision does not forbid the pronouncing of a judgment in bank unless concurred in by four of the justices who were physically present at an oral argument, or require that all the judges qualified to “sit” shall literally “hear” an argument,²⁰ whenever there is an oral argument, under this provision only the justices who are present at such argument are authorized to take part in the decision of the case,¹ unless parties, stipulate that a justice not present at argument may participate, it being held that violation of this requirement is a mere error or irregularity which may be waived by the parties.²

Submission on briefs.—When a cause is submitted on the briefs alone, all the justices have an equal opportunity to read the argument, and are deemed to be present at the argument within the meaning of the constitution. And all or any of them are qualified to join in the decision.³

§ 572. Effect of Change of Law.—It is a general rule that it is the province of an appellate court to review the judgment of an inferior court as of the time when it was rendered,⁴ and decide whether the judgment or order made by the court below was correct or erroneous at the time it was made or rendered.⁵ This is in accord with the rule that the courts do not usually give statutes a retroactive effect.⁶

But when jurisdiction of the appellate court is founded upon a statute, the repeal of the statute takes away its jurisdiction and causes all pending proceedings to cease and terminate at the time and in the condition which existed when the repeal became operative, unless special provision is made to the contrary.⁷ So, also, the repeal of a statute without a saving clause, pending an appeal which has the effect of suspending the judgment appealed

from, deprives the parties of all rights thereunder except, of course, such as may not be divested by legislative changes in the law.⁸ If, therefore, a judgment was wrong on the law as it stood at the time of its rendition, the judgment will not be reversed if the law has been repealed, because if the case is remanded, the trial court must recognize the repeal and conform on the second trial to the law as it then is, and not to the law as it may have been at the time of the first trial.⁹ On the other hand, a judgment rightful when entered will be reversed if it cannot be affirmed because in violation of the present existing law.¹⁰ This rule is not applicable, however, when the judgment has become final and the appeal does not suspend its operation.¹¹

§ 573. Effect of Repeal of Statutes Imposing Penalties. Since there can be no vested right in a penalty until it has been reduced to final judgment, the repeal without a saving clause of a statute imposing a penalty pending an appeal which suspends the judgment will deprive the appellate court of any power to render a judgment by which

Since an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, formerly allowed in this state, was a separate and independent appeal, which in no way suspended the judgment or interfered with its finality, the repeal of the statute conferring a right of action pending an appeal from such an order, without supersedeas or stay bond, did not have the effect of destroying the judgment affirmed on a direct appeal, or the right of the appellant to be heard upon his motion for a new trial, though, if the appeal should be granted, it necessarily had the effect of vacating the judgment, and then, by virtue of the repeal, the action could no longer be prosecuted; People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, 112 Pac. 866.

Affirmance of void judgment.—The affirmance of a void judgment imparts no validity to it,⁴ especially if such an affirmance is put upon grounds not touching its validity.⁵

§ 576. By Equal Division of Court.—Where one of the justices of the supreme court is disqualified from participating in the decision, and the others are equally divided, the mere failure to agree, does not have the effect, ipso facto, of an affirmance as the constitution requires the concurrence of four justices to pronounce judgment in bank.⁶ In such case the court, in consideration of expediency and the presumption of correctness attaching to the judgment of the trial court, will affirm the judgment where there is no probability of any change in the opinion of those constituting the court, or of any immediate change in the personnel of the appellate court.⁷ But where there is a prospect of an immediate change in the personnel of the court, the cause will be retained for presentation on the merits before the new court.⁸ When, however, affirmative action is necessary, the equal division of the court necessitates a denial of relief. For example, when upon an appeal from a judgment in a mandamus proceeding, the court is equally divided as to the issuance of the writ directly from the appellate court instead of

signed is a trivial one in the computation of the amount of the judgment which could have been corrected in the trial court,¹⁹ or where the defendant did not controvert any allegations in the complaint or offer any evidence in support of his defense.²⁰ Where an appeal has not been prosecuted for two terms, the respondent, on filing a transcript, may ask an affirmance of judgment with damages on the ground that the appeal was taken for delay.¹

On motion.—An appeal will not, however, be affirmed on motion prior to the regular hearing simply on the ground that it is asserted to be clearly without merit. Such a course is unfair to other litigants entitled to priority.²

§ 578. Defects in Proceedings—Defects leading up to order appealed from.—Defects in the proceedings leading up to the order denying an application for relief do not authorize a dismissal of an appeal therefrom,³ but require an affirmance of the order.⁴ For example, an order denying a motion for new trial was affirmed where there was a failure to serve a notice of intention to move for a new trial upon an adverse party⁵ or at all.⁶

Indeed, the order in such case would be affirmed without looking further into the record,⁷ as the trial court has no jurisdiction to grant the motion, and the order denying it was properly made.

Defects in proceedings for review.—The lack of a bill of exceptions, though not a ground for a dismissal of an appeal,⁸ is rather a ground for a judgment of affirmance, if, as usually the case, there is, in the absence of such bill of exceptions, nothing in the record upon which the action of the superior court can be properly reviewed.⁹ The respondent is not authorized to move for an affirmance of the judgment prior to a hearing upon the appeal in its regular order, but upon the hearing of the appeal, a judgment of affirmance will be given if there is no error apparent on the judgment-roll.¹⁰ So, also, the judgment appealed from will be affirmed where the appellant has failed to comply with the rules of court relating to the mode of preparing transcripts, and the transcript filed is unintelligible.¹¹

§ 579. Where There are Other Errors or the Complaint is Defective.—Upon an appeal by a plaintiff from a judgment for the defendant on the merits, the appellate court can consider only such errors as are shown to have contributed to its rendition, and not such as might have defeated a contrary judgment. If, for example, a judgment for the defendant is the result of error in excluding evidence which should have been received, he, as respondent upon an appeal, cannot, for the purpose of sustaining the judgment, have a consideration of errors against him which are entirely disconnected with the trial, or the judgment as rendered. Objections to a complaint which should be pointed out by special demurrer, cannot, even if specified and overruled, be considered for the purpose of sustaining a judgment for the defendant erroneously rendered after a trial on the merits.¹² Even the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action cannot be urged in support of a judgment for the defendant, which appears by the record to be in no way based upon or due to such defect, unless it is made to appear that the complaint is not amendable.¹³ To hold otherwise would be manifestly unjust when the defect is one which could have been remedied by an amendment.

§ 580. Where Reversal Would be Ineffectual.—An appellate court will not reverse a judgment when for some reason a reversal would be ineffectual,¹⁴ and if it is apparent that in case a new trial should be granted, the verdict of the jury must be the same, the judgment of the court below will not be disturbed.¹⁵

Where the questions presented by an appeal have become moot, a reversal would prove fruitless, as any opinion given by the appellate court upon the merits of the case would not be followed by any action on the part of the trial court, and would not constitute an adjudication of the rights of the parties. In some jurisdictions, the courts, upon a presentation of the facts, affirm the judgment or order appealed from without a consideration of the merits of the case.¹⁶ This course has been pursued in some California cases,¹⁷ but the practice generally is to dismiss the appeal upon the view that it presents no real controversy, but only a moot or academic question.¹⁸

§ 581. Affirmance upon Remission of Damages.—When the only error in a judgment is that the amount of the recovery is excessive, and the excess may be segregated, the effect of the error may be absolutely obviated by a remission of such amount, and it is common practice to permit the appellant to file a remittitur or written consent to the reduction of the judgment in the appellate court, and to affirm the judgment as so modified.¹⁹ There is

Where damages are unliquidated.—Although elsewhere there is authority to the contrary, the rule seems to be settled in California that a remission of damages may be directed even in cases where there is no precise measure of damages, as in actions for damages for personal injury, for example. If in such case, the jury appears to have been influenced by other considerations than the testimony before them in arriving at the amount of their verdict, the appellate court may order that judgment be reversed unless the plaintiff files a stipulation remitting the excess.² If there have been two trials, and the jury in the second with improper evidence before it renders a verdict greater than the first verdict based upon proper evidence as to damages, the plaintiff will be directed to remit the difference, as it must be presumed that the jury on the first trial made a fair and conscientious award, and with that as a basis for consideration, it is reasonable to suppose that the improper evidence prejudiced the appellant to the extent of the difference between the two verdicts.³

III. MODIFICATION.

§ 582. Authority to Modify.—It has never been the rule in California that on appeal from a judgment as an entirety, the power of the court is limited to an affirmance or reversal of the judgment as a whole. On the contrary, it has been the uniform practice to modify the judgment, when a modification is appropriate and necessary to a correct determination of the rights of the parties. When a party appeals from a judgment as a whole, he seeks not only a reversal, but also any proper modification of the judgment.⁴ The appellate court does not reverse a judgment or direct a new trial, if it is able from the record to determine the rights of the parties, but it will itself make a final determination of the rights of the parties by a correction or modification of the judgment.⁵ Under its authority to modify the judgment or order appealed from, the appellate court will render its own judgment to that effect, or will direct such action in the court below as in its opinion will best conserve the rights of the parties to the action, without subjecting them to further delay or expense.⁶ This rule is followed whether the error not prevail in the action, or because he prefers to remit such damages rather than submit to the delay consequent upon a new trial.¹³

IV. REVERSAL.

§ 585. In General.—The distinction between a reversal of a judgment and an affirmance with a modification is too marked and radical to be disregarded. An order that a judgment be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to enter a judgment in accord with the opinion of the appellate court is a reversal, and the part directing the entry of a new judgment relates solely to proceedings after the reversal. The fact that the same result can be reached by a modification does not affect the character of the order in question.¹⁴ So, also, when an appellate court renders the judgment, instead of directing the trial court to modify its judgment, the judgment is reversed, for otherwise there would be two judgments for the same cause of action.¹⁵

§ 586. Partial Reversal.—A judgment may be reversed in part and affirmed in part when the erroneous portion can be segregated from the remainder, as where the error has affected but one or more of a greater number of distinct and several issues or causes of action.¹⁶ So, also, a judgment may be reversed as to one of several coparties.¹⁷ It was the common-law rule that the reversal of a joint judgment against several joint tort-feasors for error against one defendant necessitated a reversal of the judgment as to all of the defendants. This rule has been materially modified, if not entirely superseded, by statute in this state, and now it is the rule that if a verdict be given against several defendants who have been sued jointly, the verdict and judgment, if found to be erroneous as to any one of the defendants, may be reversed as to him, and continued in full force and effect as to the remaining defendants.¹⁸ When one of several coparties appeals from a judgment against all, the judgment may be reversed as to the appellant and left undisturbed as to his coparties who do not appeal.¹⁹

§ 587. Rendering or Ordering Final Judgment.—While the code confers upon the appellate courts power to “direct the proper judgment or order to be entered,”²⁰ it is not the practice to direct the entry of judgment in the court below in actions at law, except where the facts have been found by the judge who tried the cause, or by the special verdict of a jury, or where, from the character of the action or pleadings, one of the parties is entitled to judgment without proof.¹ The court cannot direct the entry of judgment when there are controverted facts to be decided.² But, unless the circumstances require the cause to be remanded for further proceedings, an appellate court may order a judgment for the defendant when the plaintiff in his complaint has admitted facts precluding a recovery.³ So, also, it may render judgment for the party entitled thereto when the facts appear in an agreed statement and show that one of the parties is entitled to judgment,⁴ or when the findings are undisputed and support a judgment for the appellant, and it is improbable that a new trial would result more favorably for the respondent.⁵ In the latter case the appellate court does not determine questions of fact. It merely takes the findings as made by the trial court, and determines a question of law as to what is the proper judgment to be rendered on such findings.⁶ Extreme caution should be exercised in refusing new trials where judgments are reversed. The discretion of the appellate court should be exercised in that direction only in cases where it is plain either from the pleadings or from the nature of the controversy that the party against whom the reversal is pronounced, cannot prevail in the suit.⁷ Unless the appellate court can satisfy itself from the record as to the ultimate rights of the parties, it will not undertake in reversing a judgment to finally settle the same.⁸ It is obvious that the trial court cannot be directed to enter judgment on the findings, where the findings have been set aside as unsupported by the evidence.⁹ Neither will the court order judgment for the appellant upon the findings when it may be that a different case would be made out on a new trial,¹⁰ or when the evidence is not in the record and it is doubtful whether the trial court gave its finding the same construction the appellate court does,¹¹ or where it appears that the trial court acted inadvertently in the adoption of the findings and determination of the proper judgment to be given thereon,¹² or where the respondent asserts that he objected to certain findings and would have impeached them by bill of exceptions bringing up the evidence had the judgment been against him,¹³ or generally where to do so would cause grave injustice.¹⁴ On reversing a judgment for the defendant on a nonsuit, a judgment for the plaintiff will not be awarded although the answer presents no defense. The reason is that, in the absence of a trial below, it cannot be known what course would have been taken by amendment or otherwise by way of defense.¹⁵ And judgment will not be ordered upon special findings inconsistent with a general verdict where the appellant failed to move for judgment in his favor on the special findings.¹⁶

Upon the reversal of an order refusing to vacate a former order, the practice generally is not directly to vacate the former order, but to remand the cause with directions to the court below to set it aside.¹⁷

§ 588. Directing Judgment When Necessary to Make Findings.—Since an appellate court has no power to make findings, it cannot modify a judgment or direct the entry of a different judgment, where such judgment would not be supported by the findings and would in effect require that new findings be made by the appellate court.¹⁸ It cannot, therefore, direct what judgment should be entered where it reverses the judgment because the testimony is insufficient to sustain a finding on any material point. In such a case there must be a new trial.¹⁹ For the same reason, an appellate court has no authority to order judgment in accordance with testimony erroneously excluded by a trial court;²⁰ and it will not direct final judgment upon the evidence.¹

§ 589. Ordering New Trial and Other Proceedings.— It is undoubted that the appellate court has power to order a new trial as the power to do so is expressly conferred by the code.² The granting of a new trial upon the reversal of a judgment is within the discretion of the appellate court. And it may either direct the cause to be tried de novo, or that a particular issue be tried, leaving all the facts found by the court remaining as facts in the case;³ or it may direct the trial court to find upon an issue either upon evidence before it or such further evidence as may be introduced.⁴ The appellate court cannot direct the entry of judgment, but must award a new trial where the verdict or findings are unsupported by the evidence,⁵ or where they are the result of evidence erroneously admitted or excluded,⁶ or where there is a failure to find upon material issues upon which evidence has been introduced,⁷ or where the findings would not support a judgment for the appellant if such a judgment were ordered,⁸ or where there is prejudicial error as to the instructions,⁹ as well as in other cases. The usual practice, on a reversal of an order denying a new trial, is to vacate the order, grant the new trial, and remand the cause for a retrial.¹⁰

Other proceedings.—When a judgment is reversed, an appellate court may remand the cause for the purpose of allowing the appellant to amend his pleadings, if such a course seems to be required in the interests of justice.¹¹ Accordingly, where a defendant sued by a fictitious name appears and answers, but the complaint is not amended by substituting his true name, the judgment will not be reversed, but the court below will be directed to amend the complaint as of a date prior to the judgment, in order to support the judgment.¹² But when upon an appeal from a judgment upon a demurrer to the complaint, it appears that the complaint is wholly insufficient, the court

A reversal may practically end the controversy. When such is the case, it is usually accompanied with an order dismissing the action.¹⁴ And where a reversal is placed upon the ground that the trial court was without jurisdiction, that court will be directed to dismiss the action.¹⁵ It has been held that inasmuch as the imposition of terms as a condition to relief from default is a matter resting primarily in the discretion of the trial court, the appellate court will not include in its judgment reversing the action of the court below a direction as to terms.¹⁶ On appeal from an erroneous order refusing a motion to call in a different judge to preside at the hearing of a motion for new trial, the proper order is one pronouncing the order of the lower court void. The effect of such an order would be to vacate it and send it back for hearing before a qualified judge.¹⁷

§ 590. Effect of Reversal.—To reverse is to overthrow, set aside, make void, annul, repeal, revoke or vacate.¹⁸ When a judgment or order is reversed, it is entirely vacated, and is without vitality or force.¹⁹ The proceeding is left where it stood before the judgment or order was made,²⁰ and the parties stand in the same position as if no such judgment or order had ever been rendered or made.¹ They have the same rights which they originally had.² When the appellate court reverses a judgment and its mandate is filed in the lower court, the judgment is reversed whether the lower court afterwards makes any order conforming its judgment to that of the appellate court or not.³

The reversal of a judgment or decree causes other proceedings dependent upon it to fall.⁴ An order made after judgment in execution of its terms ought to fall with the judgment and is substantially reversed by the reversal of the judgment.⁵ And it has been held that a reversal sets aside a sale of the defendant's property to the plaintiff in satisfaction of the judgment.⁶

If the order reversed is an order vacating a previous order, the effect of the reversal is to restore the previous order to full force and effect.⁷ A reversal of an order settling an account of an executor necessarily vacates a decree of distribution made at the same time.⁸

On appeal from part of judgment.—Since an appeal from a distinct and independent part of a judgment does not bring up the other parts of the judgment for review in the appellate court,⁹ a reversal of the part appealed from does not, as a general rule, affect the portions of the decree not dependent thereon, and they will stand as a final adjudication.¹⁰ There are, however, cases of appeals from a part of a judgment where the part appealed from is so interwoven and connected with the remainder, or so dependent thereon, that the appeal from a part of it affects the other parts or involves a consideration of the whole, and is really an appeal from the judgment, and where if a reversal is ordered, it should extend to the entire judgment. In such cases, the appellate court must have power to do what justice requires and may extend its reversal as far as may be deemed necessary to accomplish that end.¹¹

When court has no jurisdiction.—Where the court is without jurisdiction of an appeal, a reversal is unauthorized and leaves the judgment or order in full force and effect as if no appeal had been attempted.¹²

Reversal of judgment of appellate court.—When the supreme court of the United States reverses a judgment of affirmance rendered by the supreme court of this state, such reversal does not immediately reverse the judgment of the superior court. But upon the coming down of the remittitur, the appeal is still pending for such further disposition as is not inconsistent with the opinion filed by the federal supreme court.¹³

§ 591. Effect of Reversal of Order on Motion for New Trial.—Although an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial was in a different and distinct line of proceeding from a direct appeal from a judgment, still a reversal on appeal from the order denying a motion for a new trial, and remanding the cause for retrial, as effectually vacated the judgment as did a reversal of the judgment upon a direct appeal therefrom.¹⁴ It placed the parties in the same position as if the cause had never been tried,¹⁵ with the exception that the opinion of the appellate court was followed so far as practicable in the new trial.¹⁶

The reversal of an order granting a new trial leaves a verdict standing as it came from the jury; and if judgment has not been rendered, the parties are entitled to have it rendered and entered.¹⁷ If judgment was entered, it stands as the judgment in the action and has effect from the date of its original entry. This is true because the effect of the order is suspended by the appeal therefrom, and rendered ineffectual until the determina-

§ 592. Restitution.—Where a judgment or decree of an inferior court is reversed on appeal, the party appellant is in general entitled to restitution of all the things lost by reason of the judgment in the lower court. Accordingly, where justice requires it, the courts will place him as nearly as may be in the condition in which he stood previously.¹⁹ The restitution may be directed and provided for in the original action itself,²⁰ or it may be sought in a separate action instituted for that purpose.¹ This is recognized by the code, which provides as follows:

“When the judgment or order is reversed or modified, the appellate court may make complete restitution of all property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order, so far as such restitution is consistent with protection of a purchaser of property at a sale ordered by the judgment, or had under process issued upon the judgment, on the appeal from which the proceedings were not stayed; and for relief in such cases the appellant may have his action against the respondent enforcing the judgment for the proceeds of the sale of the property, after deducting therefrom the expenses of the sale.”²

This provision has been a part of the rule of procedure in this state since June, 1853.³ It is not mandatory upon the court, but the power to make restitution rests in its discretion.⁴ It was held in an early case, that this provision applies only where the judgment operates upon specific property in such a manner that its title is not changed,—as by directing the possession of real estate, or the delivery of documents, or of particular personal property in the hands of the defendant, and the like.⁵ It does not, therefore, authorize restitution when the property of the defendant is sold to bona fide purchasers,⁶ nor does the rule apply to property lost, not in consequence of the judgment appealed from, but under an order prior thereto from which no appeal was taken.⁷

V. RENDITION, ENTRY AND MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT.

§ 593. In General.—A judgment on appeal, like a judgment of a trial court, has the force and effect of a judgment from the time of its entry. The fact that within a limited time thereafter a rehearing may be ordered, while it may suspend the operation of the judgment, does not in the meantime deprive the judgment of its inherent attributes as an act of the court.⁸

Modification or vacation of judgment.—An appellate court has inherent power to revise, modify and correct a judgment rendered by it while it has jurisdiction and control of the cause.⁹ A judgment of the supreme court

Judgment of district court of appeal.—By virtue of the provision of the constitution that judgments of the district court of appeal shall become final upon the expiration of thirty days after the same shall have been pronounced, a district court of appeal may change, modify or set aside its opinion and judgment before the expiration of the thirty-day period, but not afterwards. The provision that the judgment shall become “final” therein is not to be construed as rendering such judgment conclusive as to its date, of the rights of the parties, but only as divesting the district court of further power to set aside or modify its judgment.¹⁶ Within thirty days after the judgment of a district court of appeal has become final therein, the supreme court may order the cause to be heard and determined by it.¹⁷

§ 594. Rehearing as Condition Precedent to Modification.—The supreme court in department has authority to modify or correct its own judgment without granting a rehearing,¹⁸ and the supreme court in bank, may, by virtue of its supervisory jurisdiction over the action of a department, correct or modify a judgment rendered in department. The provision that within the time limited an order may be made that the cause decided in department “be heard” and decided in bank does not necessarily imply that an additional or oral argument must be made before it can be so considered. This provision merely limits the time within which the judgment may be changed or modified; it does not deprive the court of its inherent power to modify or change its judgment without such order so long as the cause is under its control. The court may exercise this power upon its own motion, irrespective of any application by a party, and it may act upon the record already before it, including the argu-

VI. HARMLESS AND REVERSIBLE ERROR.

General Principles.

§ 595. Rule Stated.—It is a general and well-settled rule that judgments will not be reversed because of errors that are harmless, that is to say, because of errors which do not prejudice the substantial rights of the appellant or affect the result of the action.²⁰ Likewise, a judgment will not be reversed for error which is abstract,¹ or merely technical,² or immaterial,³ or on account of errors which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties,⁴ or injure the appellant,⁵ or on account of errors whose injurious effects have been obviated by subsequent proceedings.⁶ Although a litigant who has been denied a trial according to the law of the land, has, in a legal sense, been aggrieved, if, from the record the appellate court can see that the injury is not substantial, it is not such a grievance as will call for redress.⁷ And of course a judgment will not be reversed because of an error which is favorable to the appellant,⁸ or which affects only the rights of parties not appealing.⁹

§ 596. Statutory Provision.—Section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

“The court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error, improper ruling, instruction, or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which, in the opinion of said court, does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. defect, the said party complaining or appealing sustained and suffered substantial injury, and that a different result would have been probable if such error, ruling, instruction or defect had not occurred or existed. There shall be no presumption that error is prejudicial, or that injury was done if error is shown.”¹⁰

“No judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.”¹¹

Prior to this amendment, the power of the court to disregard unimportant and unsubstantial errors appearing in the record was somewhat limited by its inability to consider the evidence. If the evidence as to a fact in issue were in substantial conflict, the appellate court was concluded by the decision of the trial court or jury thereon for all purposes of the case, unless the error entered into and affected the consideration of that evidence. Under this amendment it is not only within the power but it is also the duty of the appellate court to review the conflicting evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not an error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.¹² This section was not intended to abrogate or dispense with rules of procedure and evidence, however. And it would be giving it unwarranted scope to apply it to a state of facts where to do so would be in effect to say that it is not necessary to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or having stated a cause of action, it need not be supported by sufficient evidence.¹³

Just what may be included in the phrase "miscarriage of justice" must be decided in each case as it is presented, for no precise definition can be given to it.¹⁴

§ 598. Presumptions as to Effect of Error.—It has always been the desire and policy of the courts of review to disregard unimportant and unsubstantial errors appearing in the record and to reverse causes only for reasons affecting the merits of the case and the substantial rights of the parties. But because of the limitation of the power of the court to weigh the evidence for the purpose of determining whether the error had or had not in fact worked injury, just referred to, the court was bound to apply the doctrine that prejudice was presumed to follow from substantial error,¹⁵ or as the doctrine was oftentimes stated, all errors were presumed to work injury unless it clearly appeared that no injury could have resulted. This presumption threw the burden upon the respondent to make it appear that no injury could have or did result from the errors committed by the trial court.¹⁶ Section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended in 1897 by adding a provision that "there shall be no presumption that error is prejudicial, or that injury was done if error is shown." The constitutionality of this provision was drawn in question soon after its enactment,¹⁷ and in several cases it has been held, notwithstanding this amendment, that prejudice would be presumed from error, unless the error was trivial or the record showed that no prejudice to a substantial right could have resulted.¹⁸ Whatever may have been the doctrine formerly, the rule is now settled by the amendment to the constitution just referred to, that injury is not presumed from error of law, but must appear affirmatively to the mind of the court after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, or from the intrinsic nature of the error itself, in order to warrant a reversal.¹⁹ The burden now rests upon an appellant not only to show error, but also to show that the error is sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal.²⁰

Grounds Considered.

§ 599. Confession of Error—Stipulation.—If the respondent confesses error and asks that the judgment be reversed, and the points made for reversal by the appellant appear to be well based, the judgment will be reversed.¹ But when the appellant contends that the findings warrant the appellate court in directing a judgment for him, the respondent should not be allowed to foreclose an examination of the record for the purpose of determining whether such a judgment is proper, by a partial confession of certain errors which may or may not be determinative of the rights of the parties.²

Stipulation.—A judgment may be reversed pursuant to a stipulation that it bide the event of another appeal.³

§ 600. De Minimis Non Curat Lex.—The maxim, de minimis non curat lex, precludes the reversal of a judgment or order where the amount involved is too small to justify reopening the matter.⁴ So in actions ex contractu

the judgment will not be reversed when it is clear that only nominal damages can be recovered on another trial.⁵ This rule, however, is inapplicable to actions ex delicto, as the appellate court cannot assume, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages only.⁶ Neither is it applicable to a case where there is involved a permanent right which does not depend upon the extent of the damage measured by a money standard.⁷

Sufficiency of pleadings.—A judgment for a plaintiff will be reversed if the complaint in the action does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action,¹² and the defects have not been cured at the trial.¹³ But under section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 4½ of article VI of the constitution, a judgment will not be reversed for mere technical defects in the complaint not affecting any substantial rights of the parties.¹⁴ A judgment will not be reversed because of uncertainty in the complaint alone when it is clearly shown that the defendant could not have been misled to his injury.¹⁵ Neither will it be reversed for misjoinder of causes of action when on a retrial the same judgment would be rendered.¹⁶ Where a complaint contains several causes of action, one of which is sufficient to sustain the judgment, the judgment will not be reversed even though the other counts are defective,¹⁷ or are not sustained by the proof,¹⁸ since, for the sake of upholding the judgment, it will be presumed to be based upon the count against which there is no valid objection.¹⁹

§ 602. Demurrer.—It is well settled that an error in overruling a demurrer is not ground for reversal of a judgment rendered after a trial on the merits, unless the party was misled to his prejudice, or the error otherwise appears to have been injurious.²⁰ This rule has been frequently applied to demurrers upon the ground of misjoinder of parties,¹ upon the ground of misjoinder of causes of action,² and upon the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity.³ An error in overruling a demurrer to a part of a pleading is harmless if no proof is offered as to the part objected to and the judgment in no way depends thereon.⁴ The same is true as to an error in overruling a demurrer for misjoinder of causes of action where the trial was had upon one cause only, and the judgment is confined thereto,⁵ or the court finds against all but one cause of action.⁶ When a cross-complaint presents the same issues as are raised by the original pleadings, rulings upon a demurrer thereto are immaterial,⁷ inasmuch as on the filing of an amended pleading, the original is superseded.⁸ Any error in the ruling on a demurrer to a complaint becomes immaterial if the complaint is amended and the issues made on the amended pleading are tried and judgment rendered thereon. This rule is equally true where the complaint is amended to conform to the proofs.⁹ When, however, it appears from the record that a judgment is based entirely upon a finding as to a cause of action or defense, an error in overruling a general demurrer thereto is prejudicial.¹⁰

Failure to rule on demurrer.—A failure to rule on a demurrer is without prejudice where the demurrer possesses no merit.¹¹

§ 603. Demurrer on Ground of Uncertainty.—The overruling of a demurrer to a complaint on the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity affords no ground for reversal when it is apparent from the record that the defendant was not thereby misled or embarrassed in making his defense.¹² To warrant a reversal, it must appear that the ruling of the court affects the substantial rights of the demurrant.¹³ The court is particularly reluctant to reverse a judgment on demurrer for ambiguity where the defendant has answered and there was a trial, for it is then in a position to judge whether the defendant was prejudiced. If there has been no answer or trial, as where on the overruling of the demurrer the plaintiff takes judgment on the default of the defendant to answer, the court has no guide but the complaint by which to determine whether the defendant is misled, and it is not necessary to make as strong a showing of prejudice.¹⁴ If, however, the judgment is reversed for other and substantial errors, and the cause is remanded, the court below will be instructed to sustain the demurrer with leave to amend.¹⁵ This rule is applicable also to a ruling upon a demurrer to an answer.¹⁶ But manifestly it can have no application where there is not an entire failure to state a cause of action.¹⁷

§ 604. Amendment and Striking Out.—Although a court may have committed error in refusing to allow a party to amend his pleadings, such error is not prejudicial if the facts are proved on the trial as if they had been pleaded,¹⁸ or if the party was allowed to amend during the trial,¹⁹ or if the evidence to be adduced under such amendment is admissible under the original pleading.²⁰ And it is not reversible error to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend where the defects were not curable

by amendment.¹ The granting of leave to amend without notice of motion having been given is harmless where the motion should have been granted had notice been given.² A defendant is not injured by an order granting leave to amend by adding another party plaintiff when he is offered but refuses further time to answer.³ And the service of an amended pleading on the party instead of his attorney is merely a technical error not warranting a reversal.⁴

Striking out.—Any error committed in striking out allegations in pleadings is cured when the facts alleged in the parts stricken out are, notwithstanding the order, proved on the trial and treated as in issue.⁵ For the same reason the striking out of a cross-complaint is harmless where the facts are provable under the answer.⁶ Granting a motion to strike out parts of a complaint is harmless where, had the motion been denied, the complaint, nevertheless, would have been bad on general demurrer.⁷ An error in denying a motion to strike out portions of a complaint will not justify a reversal if the parties are not misled or prejudiced thereby,⁸ or where the error is cured by an instruction to the jury to disregard such improper matter.⁹

§ 605. Variance.—A variance which could not have misled a defendant to his prejudice in maintaining his defense on the merits is immaterial and cannot operate to overthrow the judgment.¹⁰ Such a variance must be treated as immaterial under section 469 of the Code of Civil Procedure and will be disregarded on appeal.¹¹ Since, however, the relief granted in an action must be the relief sought, judgment will be reversed where the case made out by the findings is different from that presented by the pleadings.¹² In such case the variance may be objected to upon appeal from the judgment; and it has been held that the fact that it might have been cured by amendment does not make the variance less fatal to the validity of the judgment.¹³ This is a cardinal rule applicable to pleadings in suits formerly denominated suits in equity as in all other pleadings.¹⁴

sion to give a reason for a ruling.¹⁹ Misconduct is not ground for reversal which is not prejudicial in any way, whether it be misconduct of the trial court,²⁰ counsel,¹ a party,² a juror,³ or a witness.⁴

Jury.—Irregularities in the formation of a jury not going to the merits will be disregarded upon appeal.⁵ The disallowance of a challenge without cause is not prejudicial, although it forces a party to use a peremptory challenge, if he has a peremptory challenge left after the jury is accepted.⁶ But such error is prejudicial if the party by reason thereof exhausted his peremptory challenges and was compelled to accept jurors whom he otherwise would have challenged peremptorily.⁷ Whether or not section 4½ of article VI of the constitution is applicable to a case where a jury trial is denied, it is settled that the denial of the right of a trial by jury to a party entitled thereto is, in itself, a miscarriage of justice.⁸ While a jury should conform to the instructions upon matters of law, an appellate court will not disregard a verdict contrary to such erroneous instruction.⁹

which assume as true the facts brought out by the plaintiff.²⁰ And when one cause of action is sufficiently supported by evidence, which is not tainted by error, errors in the admission of evidence relative to other causes of action become immaterial.¹

same testimony is subsequently admitted without objection.⁷ The exclusion of evidence offered by an appellant is harmless where the court found in his favor on that issue.⁸ And where the plaintiff fails to make out a prima facie case, the judgment will not be reversed on account of the exclusion of testimony which would not have tended to make such case.⁹ But notwithstanding section 4½ of article VI of the constitution, it is reversible error to exclude competent evidence which would exonerate the defendant from liability.¹⁰ So, also, it is generally error to refuse a plaintiff opportunity to present corroborating evidence.¹¹

11. Hockerston v. Hockerston, 41 Cal. App. 195, 182 Pac. 325, holding error harmless under the circumstances.

§ 609. Failure to Rule upon Objections.—The practice of deciding a case without declaring upon reserved rulings touching the admissibility of evidence is a practice to be reprobated. It is the better practice to decide upon the admissibility of evidence when it is offered, but if the rule be departed from, it is clearly the duty of the court at a subsequent stage of the case to rule upon the point distinctly, and if the evidence be excluded, to state on what ground.¹² It happens sometimes that the determination of the merits of the case turns on a question touching the admissibility of certain evidence, and in such event it would be proper for the court to take the question under advisement, where neither party could be prejudiced by such a course. On the other hand, the practice might in some cases seriously embarrass a party who, not knowing what the final ruling will be, cannot determine what further evidence he should introduce. Therefore, whether the practice will be ground for reversal in any given case depends upon the circumstances thereof. If it appears that the party suffered no prejudice by the reservation, the judgment will not be reversed on this account,¹³ even though the appellant may have been misled to a certain extent.¹⁴ But if it is shown that substantial injustice to a litigant resulted, the error is of sufficient gravity to call for a reversal.¹⁵ A failure to rule on an objection to evidence is prejudicial error where the appellant, if advised by a decision of the court admitting the evidence, might have rebutted it,¹⁶ but not where the evidence is either properly admissible or immaterial,¹⁷ or the party has introduced all the evidence on which he relies.¹⁸ So, also, a failure to rule on objections to offered evidence is harmless where the evidence is inadmissible because relating to an issue not properly pleaded.¹⁹ Where evidence offered by a party is admitted subject to the objection of the adverse party, the party offering it may not be prejudiced by a subsequent failure to rule on the objection.²⁰

§ 610. Nonsuit.—An error in denying a motion for nonsuit is harmless where the defect in the plaintiff's testimony is subsequently supplied by the evidence of the defendant.¹ So, also, a denial of a nonsuit as to a single cause of action is harmless where the court directs the jury to find for the defendant thereon,² or where counsel for the defendant in his argument states that he does not rely thereon, and the court eliminates it from the consideration of the jury.³ And a failure to rule on such a motion is harmless when, otherwise, it is without merit.⁴ An error in granting a nonsuit without a formal motion therefor, is harmless when the defects in the plaintiff's case are incurable.⁵ So, also, any error in di-

§ 611. Instructions.—A judgment will not be reversed because of the giving or refusing of instructions which do not harm the appellant.⁷ To justify a reversal, under the constitution it must appear, from a consideration of all the evidence, that any error in this respect resulted in a miscarriage of justice.⁸ It is not necessary to invoke the remedial provision of the constitution to show that errors in instructions are harmless where the verdict would be the same with correct instructions,⁹ or to show

While a conflict between instructions in essential particulars is ground for reversal,¹⁴ a reversal is not justified where the instructions are correct as a whole,¹⁵ or where the conflict relates to matters not properly before the jury,¹⁶ or could not have misled the jury,¹⁷ or generally where they do not prejudice the appellant.¹⁸ The crucial test is whether a man of ordinary intelligence reading the charge intended for his guidance would be unable to ascertain its meaning as a whole, by inherent contradictions creating confusion and doubt in his mind touching his duty as a juror.¹⁹

In equitable actions.—Errors in instructing a jury in an equitable action are harmless as the verdict is merely advisory.²⁰

§ 612. Findings and Verdict.—Errors and irregularities in a verdict or findings which are without prejudice will not justify a reversal.¹ A judgment cannot be sustained which rests for its validity and support upon some particular finding which is unsupported by the evidence,² or is outside the issues made by the pleadings,³ or which is itself based upon a count in the complaint which states no cause of action.⁴ But if a judgment is amply supported by findings which are unobjectionable, findings on other issues become immaterial, and it is not ground for reversal that such other findings are unsupported by evidence,⁵ or are uncertain or otherwise defective.⁶ However unsupported or inconclusive any number of findings may be, if in any case there be at least one clear, sustained and sufficient finding upon which the judgment may rest, every presumption being in favor of the judgment, it will be concluded on appeal that the court rested its judgment upon that finding (or such findings) and the others will be disregarded.⁷ Moreover, any error in finding against an appellant on a particular issue is without prejudice to him, if the judgment gave him all the relief to which he was entitled had the finding been in his favor.⁸ So, also, a general verdict imports findings in favor of the prevailing party on all material issues, and if upon such a verdict one issue alone is sustained by the evidence and is not affected by any error, the want of evidence to sustain the finding on the other issues or any errors committed in regard to them cannot be prejudicial.⁹

Conflict between findings.—Where there are contradictory findings about material matters and the determination of them one way or the other is essential to the correctness of the judgment, the judgment cannot stand.¹⁰ However, findings are to be liberally construed in support of the judgment, and, if possible, are to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict upon material points.¹¹ And a judgment will not be reversed on account of a conflict in the findings unless the conflict is clear, and the findings are incapable of being harmoniously construed.¹² If the conflict arises out of a clerical error, the error will be disregarded.¹³ Where the ultimate facts in issue are found by the court, a contradictory finding as to a probative fact involved therein has no effect.¹⁴ And an immaterial variance between the findings and the conclusions of law will not authorize a reversal.¹⁵

versal. To make findings disposing of legal issues is not prejudicial error.¹⁹ And a judgment correct in substance will not be reversed because of an erroneous special verdict,²⁰ or because of errors in the conclusions of law.¹ But since an appellate court cannot assume the truth or falsity of allegations in the pleadings either by reference to the testimony or the facts actually found, it must reverse when the findings are indecisive as to what allegations were found to be true and what false.²

§ 613. Findings Outside the Issues.—As findings of fact are required to respond to and be within the issues raised by the pleadings, findings outside the issue cannot be considered when determining whether the judgment is supported by the findings.³ If, without these findings, the judgment is insufficiently supported, it must be reversed.⁴ But in this connection, it must be remembered that issues may be made at the trial as well as by the pleadings. And if the parties treat certain matters as in issue, they will not afterwards be heard to say that no such issue was raised on the trial.⁵ The mere fact that certain findings are outside the issues becomes immaterial, however, if the judgment is amply supported by other proper findings.⁶ This rule is applicable where findings are contrary to admissions in the pleadings. Such findings are outside the issues, and if the judgment is not sufficiently supported by other findings, it must be reversed.⁷

§ 614. Failure to Find.—The absolute right to have a material issue presented by the pleadings determined by a finding of the court is one important to the parties to a suit, and the failure to make a finding thereon results in prejudicial error entitling the complaining suitor to a reversal,⁸ provided it appears from the record that there was evidence introduced as to such issue, and the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding in favor of such party.⁹

On the other hand, a failure to find upon an issue is not ground for reversal when no substantial rights of the appellant are prejudiced thereby;¹⁰ as is the case, when the issue as to which there is no finding is immaterial and the finding if made and in appellant's favor would not require a different judgment.¹¹ Where the facts found sustain the judgment, an omission to find upon immaterial issues, a finding upon which would not necessitate any change in the judgment, is not ground for reversal.¹² In short, the failure to find on any issue not necessary to support the judgment is harmless.¹³

Even in case the omitted issue is a material one, a failure to make a finding thereon which would simply have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made is without prejudice, if the finding must necessarily have been adverse to the appellant.¹⁴ If the burden of that issue is upon the appellant, and no evidence was introduced thereon, the finding, if made, would have been adverse to him, and he is not injured by a failure to make such a finding.¹⁵ In other words, a failure to find upon some issue, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, will not be held to be a ground for reversal, unless it be shown by statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue.¹⁶ Not only must it appear that evidence was introduced upon such omitted issue, but it must appear also that the evidence was sufficient to warrant a finding for the appellant.¹⁷ The appellant is not preju-

of a court on appeal from a judgment to look into the evidence with a view to reform the findings and enter a judgment in accordance with what the findings should be.⁴ When general findings and the judgment thereon are inconsistent with special findings, the judgment will be reversed as not supported by the findings.⁵ So, also, a judgment will be reversed which is not supported by the pleadings,⁶ or is uncertain in itself and is not made certain by a reference therein.⁷

VII. REMITTITUR AND PROCEEDINGS IN LOWER COURT AFTER REMAND.

Remittitur, Its Issuance and Filing.

§ 616. Definition and Nature.—Formerly, when a writ of error was issued out of the House of Lords to the court of King's Bench, the original record was itself taken to that body with the return upon the writ, and the judgment of the House of Lords was afterwards entered upon this record with the recital that it is sent back—remittitur—to be carried into effect by the court of King's Bench. In California, and in many other jurisdictions, the original record remains in the court from which the appeal is taken, and a transcript thereof is filed with the appellate court for its consideration. By reason of these changes in procedure and in the mode by which the appellate tribunal obtains jurisdiction to review the judgment of the lower court, and also by reason of the increased exercise of its appellate jurisdiction in modern days by controlling in advance the action of inferior courts, the word "remittitur" has received an additional meaning to that originally given to it, and is the term employed to designate the judgment of the appellate tribunal which is authenticated to the court from which the appeal is taken or over which its controlling jurisdiction is exercised, and corresponds to the "mandate" used in the practice of the United States supreme court.¹⁴ The certificate of the clerk of the appellate court referred to in section 958 of the Code of Civil Procedure is called a remittitur.¹⁵

ing an application to the supreme court is without prejudice where the application was subsequently denied by the supreme court); Arnold v. City of San Jose, 81 Cal. 621, 22 Pac. 878 (denial of motion to disregard statement). See supra, §§ 476-479, inclusive, the reasons leading the trial court to its conclusion are immaterial.

14. Noel v. Smith, 2 Cal. App. 158, 83 Pac. 167.

15. Granger v. Sheriff, 140 Cal. 190, 73 Pac. 816.

The office of a remittitur is to return the proceedings to the trial court and reinvest it with jurisdiction over the cause. When the remittitur has been duly issued by the appellate court and duly filed in a superior court, the proceedings from time to time are in the superior court, the appellate court being thereupon divested of jurisdiction.¹⁶

§ 617. Form, Issuance and Filing.—The code, following the constitution, requires that in all cases appealed to the supreme court or to a district court of appeals, the judgment of the appellate tribunal “shall be remitted to the court from which the appeal was taken.”¹⁷

“It must be certified by the clerk of the supreme court to the clerk with whom the judgment-roll is filed, or the order appealed from is entered.”¹⁸

And “a certified copy of the opinion in the case shall be transmitted with the remittitur.”¹⁹ When the remittitur is received by the clerk of the superior court, it must be filed by him unless his fees therefor are not paid or tendered or some other sufficient reason exists for refusing to do so.²⁰

“In cases of appeal from the judgment, the clerk with whom the roll is filed must attach the certificate to the judgment-roll, and enter a minute of the judgment of the supreme court on the docket, against the original entry.

16. See infra, § 633.

17. Code Civ. Proc., § 53. While this code section mentions only the supreme court, article VI, section 4, of the constitution provides that all statutes regulating appeals to the supreme court shall apply to appeals to district courts of appeal. “In all cases of appeal transferred to the supreme court, its judgment shall be remitted to the superior courts of the counties or cities and counties from which the appeals were taken respectively, with the same force and effect as if said cases had been appealed to the supreme court from such superior courts.” Code Civ. Proc., § 56.

18. Code Civ. Proc., § 958.

19. Supreme court rule XXI.

20. See Mabb v. Stewart, 7 Cal. Unrep. 186, 77 Pac. 402, in which in favor of a long delay of the clerk in filing the remittitur it was presumed that it was because the fee for filing had not been paid or tendered or that there was some other sufficient cause.

In cases of appeal from an order, the clerk must enter at length in the records of the court the certificate received, and minute against the entry of the order appealed from, a reference to the certificate, with a brief statement that such order has been affirmed, reversed or modified by the supreme court on appeal."¹

When this is done the judgment of the appellate court stands as the judgment of the superior court.²

In case of dismissal.—A remittitur goes in the case of a dismissal as well as in other cases.³

Form.—There is no peculiar form for a remittitur, as it will vary according to the views of the appellate court as to the proper course to be pursued by the trial court after remand.⁴ Rule XXIII of the supreme court, however, requires the clerk to insert a direction for costs in the remittitur, in all cases of affirmance, reversal or modification in which the decree contains no such direction.⁵

§ 618. Time of Issuance.—The time of issuing the remittitur has been left to the court to regulate, and rules have been made fixing the period after judgment during which the remittitur should be retained.⁶ Because of the fact that the appellate court loses jurisdiction of a case by the regular issuance and filing of the remittitur in the court below,⁷ and in order to afford parties who desire it an opportunity of moving for a rehearing or to amend, modify or set aside the judgment, one of the long-standing rules of the supreme court has been that no remittitur to the court below shall issue for a limited time after decision.⁸ By a standing order, all remittiturs are directed to issue thirty days after judgment, unless a petition for rehearing is filed.⁹

The time for the issuance of remittitur when the case is decided by a district court of appeal is prescribed by supreme court rule XXXIV, as follows:

“When a judgment of a district court of appeal becomes final therein, the remittitur shall not be issued until after the lapse of thirty days thereafter, unless otherwise ordered.”

Staying issuance.—The same principle upon which courts of common law stay the execution of their judgments when necessary to accomplish the ends of justice¹⁰ applies to appellate courts in reference to their power to stay the issuance of its remittitur. But this power will be exercised only when some extraordinary reason appears.¹¹

§ 619. Effect of Issuance upon Jurisdiction.—It is clear that jurisdiction of a cause which has been appealed is revested in the trial court when the remittitur of the appellate court has been regularly issued and when the provisions of section 958 of the Code of Civil Procedure have been complied with.¹² The jurisdiction of the trial court does not depend upon a compliance with this statute, however, for it has been specifically held that the failure of the clerk to make the entries required by this section does not deprive the superior court of jurisdiction or keep alive the stay of execution on appeal.¹³ There is no express statement in the statute as to the precise point at which jurisdiction is transferred. It has several times been held that the jurisdiction of the superior court attaches when the remittitur is regularly issued and filed with the clerk with whom the judgment-roll is filed.¹⁴ The code does not, however, call for a separate filing mark on the remittitur, and there is settled authority to the effect that all jurisdiction of the appellate court is divested on the instant the remittitur goes down.¹⁵ Since jurisdiction of a pending cause must rest in some court, it seems clear that the jurisdiction of the superior court attaches immediately upon the issuance of the remittitur and before filing.¹⁶

Effect of Decision upon Appeal as Law of Case.

§ 620. In General.—The determination of an appellate court of the rights of the parties in an appeal from the superior court is a final adjudication of those rights, and the questions of law decided by such court become the rule for the guidance of the trial court if the same questions are again presented in that controversy upon a retrial of the issues.¹⁷ The decision has become the law of the case in which it is rendered, and is thereafter in all subsequent stages of the case binding not only upon the inferior court,¹⁸ but also upon the appellate court if the case is again brought before it.¹⁹ The principle upon which this rule rests is that the judgment is an estoppel binding upon the parties and to be enforced by the court.²⁰ When the appellate court has decided that from the facts presented in the record certain legal conclusions follow, such legal conclusions must be accepted by the parties upon a retrial, if the same facts are again established, and it is the duty of the lower court not to depart therefrom,¹ and this whether the decision on appeal is or is not erroneous.²

The doctrine of the law of the case is confined to points which have been determined as a ground, or one of the grounds, of the judgment,³ or which have been considered and passed upon with a view to the new trial for the purposes of which they were important.⁴ But it does not extend to a mere opinion of the judges as to points which can have no effect upon the case in any stage of it.⁵ Neither does it extend to portions of the opinion not concurred in by the requisite number of justices.⁶ But statements in a main opinion are not deprived of their force by statements in an order denying a rehearing as to the grounds upon which the reversal rests, when the original opinion is not modified.⁷

§ 621. Same or Different Facts.—The doctrine of the law of the case does not prevent the parties from proving an entirely different state of facts upon the retrial.⁸ The former judgment and opinion of an appellate court do not constitute an adjudication of the rights of the parties controlling the subsequent proceedings in a cause to the same extent as a final judgment in another action would be an adjudication, so that the parties are thereby estopped as to their rights to the things determined, although they may discover or be able to present to the court below new facts or evidence, which may affect their rights or make a case different from that which was presented on the former appeal. They do not limit the power of the superior court, in its discretion, to permit further amendments of the pleadings, by either party, presenting additional facts which may entitle such party to relief which the facts originally alleged did not warrant.⁹ As the principle upon which the doctrine of “the law of the

When the judgment or determination is made upon a certain state of facts, it ceases to be of binding force if the facts presented at the retrial are essentially different.¹⁰ The rule can be invoked only when the fact reappears in the same circumstances in which it was originally presented.¹¹ To prevent the application of the doctrine, however, the additional allegations in the pleadings or the additional evidence must materially change the issues or the rights of the parties.¹²

§ 622. Decision upon Questions of Law.—The doctrine of the "law of the case," generally speaking, has reference only to the principles of law announced by the court as applicable to a retrial of identical facts. It does not embrace the facts themselves.¹³ As was said in an early

The appellate court cannot itself make a finding of fact when the evidence is all before it, or find the ultimate fact from other probative facts unless such ultimate fact follows as a conclusion of law therefrom.¹⁵

Evidence.—The doctrine of the law of the case has a very narrow application to evidence.²⁰ While a decision as to the admission of certain evidence would undoubtedly be binding upon the trial court if there is no change in the pleadings, it is not binding upon a subsequent trial if the pleadings are materially amended.¹ A decision that the evidence in a case is insufficient as a matter of law to go to the jury is binding on the trial court on retrial if the evidence presented is substantially the same as that on the first trial. A decision that the facts show that the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law is binding upon the trial court when the evidence on the retrial is substantially the same.²

§ 623. Sufficiency of Evidence to Support Findings.—It frequently happens that the sufficiency of the evidence to justify a decision depends upon the competency of the evidence, or the effect of an act or admission, or the construction to be given to a written instrument. If in such case the appellate court holds that the evidence was incompetent, or received an erroneous construction by the trial court, and that for this reason the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, such ruling of the appellate court becomes the law of the case, since the sufficiency of the evidence depends upon the question of law which is thus decided.³ But when the fact which is to be de-variance with the defendant's contract was binding upon the trial court, and it could not allow the filing of an amended answer setting up the same defense and omitting all reference to the contract).

A reversal of an order sustaining a general demurrer to a complaint is law of the case as to the sufficiency of the complaint as against all grounds specified in the demurrer, notwithstanding the court in its opinion confines its dis-

cided depends upon the credit to be given to the witnesses whose testimony is received, or the weight to which their testimony is entitled, or the inferences of fact that are to be drawn from the evidence, the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision must be determined by the tribunal before which it is presented, and is not controlled by an opinion of the appellate court that similar evidence at a former trial of the cause was insufficient to justify a similar decision.⁴ If the appellate court decides that the evidence is sufficient to support a finding, the trial court is authorized to make the same finding upon the same evidence.⁵ But it is not precluded from making a contrary finding if there is evidence reasonably tending to support the opposite conclusion.⁶ So, also, a decision that

It includes also the appearance and demeanor of the witnesses on the stand, the credit to which they are entitled, the inferences of fact which may be drawn from other evidence, and the harmony of one portion of the testimony with the other. The consideration of these elements is peculiarly within the province of the trial court, and whenever the decision of a fact depends thereon in whole or in part, the appellate court cannot prescribe the mode in which the decision shall be made, or take from the trial court the power of determining the sufficiency of the evidence to establish a fact); Koyer v. Willmon, 12 Cal. App. 87, 106 Pac. 599; Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. R. Co., 10 Cal. This was held to be error, as adverse possession is a question of fact and the decision on appeal did not preclude the jury from finding the evidence is insufficient to support a finding does not preclude a trial court from making the same finding upon the same evidence.⁷ The appellate court might again reverse the decision, but before doing so, it would consider whether it might not be that that portion of the evidence which could not be reproduced in the record—the demeanor of witnesses, as well as their credibility, the weight to be given to contradictory testimony, the inferences to be drawn from different portions of the evidence—was such as to support the conclusion of the trial court.⁸ Whether the evidence in a case tends to prove a fact is a question of law which arises when the admissibility of such evidence is questioned, or when it is relied upon for the purpose of establishing a controverted fact, and a decision of the appellate court that such evidence does or does not tend to establish the fact is binding on the trial court.⁹ But whether the evidence is sufficient to establish the fact is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court, and a declaration by an appellate court that the fact is established is not binding on the trial court.¹⁰ If, in such case, the appellate court, in the opinion which it renders, assumes that the evidence sustains any fact, it is only the opinion of the court, and not a finding of that fact.¹¹ So, too, whether a particular inference can under any circumstances be drawn from certain evidence is a question of law; but whether the infer-

Decision upon motion for new trial.—A decision that a trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence does not settle the law of the case that the defendant is entitled on the new trial to a nonsuit when the plaintiff closes his case. The language of the appellate court applies merely to the action of the court on the motion for new trial, and is quite inappropriate as an expression of opinion as to the merits of a motion for a nonsuit.¹³

§ 624. Application of Doctrine to Subsequent Suits.—As a general rule, the doctrine of the law of the case is adhered to in the single case where it arises, and is not carried into other cases as a precedent.¹⁴ However, it seems that the doctrine applies where the action in which the ruling was made is subsequently dismissed without prejudice and a new action is begun upon the same cause.¹⁵ Thus, as against a contention that a decision on a former appeal should not be considered the law of the case for the reason that after the going down of the remittitur the action was dismissed and no judgment was entered which could be pleaded in bar or given in evidence, it has been said:

“A similar question was spoken of by Mr. Justice Field in his concurring opinion in the case of Knight v. United Land Association, lately decided by the supreme court of the United States. Referring to the case of Tripp v.

Spring, 5 Sawy. 209, 212, Fed. Cas. No. 14,180, where at the close of the trial an oral opinion was rendered and subsequently written out, the case in the meantime, however, having been dismissed, the learned justice said: 'The opinion of the court, pronounced at the close of the trial, and subsequently written out, was, notwithstanding the dismissal, as much authority on the question of law presented as though a formal judgment had been entered, although the judgment ordered, because not entered on account of the dismissal, could not be pleaded in bar of a future action.' ''¹⁶

Elsewhere, it has been held that the doctrine applied to a case where, after a decision on the defendant's appeal, reversing a judgment of ejectment because of the insufficiency of a certain power of attorney to authorize the conveyance on which the plaintiff relied, the defendant brought a new suit in equity to enjoin the plaintiff from prosecuting his action at law and making further claims under the void conveyance. The equity suit was held to be but a continuance of the law case, as it was between the same parties, concerning the same matter, and upon the same facts, and involved the construction of the same instruments. Therefore, the decision in the law action was held binding in the equity suit.¹⁷

Powers and Duties of Trial Court.

§ 625. Compliance With Remittitur—Noncompliance.—The powers of a trial court after a cause has been remanded to it by an appellate court are determined by the directions in the remittitur. It is the duty of the trial court to comply with such directions,¹⁸ and proceedings contrary thereto must be treated as null and void.¹⁹ A trial court cannot refuse obedience to a remittitur because of any supposed errors in the judgment of the appellate court,²⁰ for as just pointed out, the decision on appeal, whether right or wrong, is binding as the law of the case.¹ On remand for trial the cause is to be tried in pursuance of the principles of law declared in the opinion,² and no error can be alleged in the action of the trial court if the new trial is had in accordance with the decision of the appellate court.³ When a cause is remanded, not for retrial, but to give effect to the decision on appeal, the trial court can take no further proceedings except such as are necessary to give effect to the judgment of the court.⁴ The general direction to the lower court to proceed in accordance with the principles announced in an opinion is a mere formality, which, of itself, neither gives authority nor limits the power of the court, as such duty would devolve upon that court without such direction. Therefore, an order for a decree in accordance with the opinion of the appellate court does not prevent the trial court from taking such a course of proceedings as will give full effect to the decision. If certain questions are left open, the trial court may pass upon them.⁵

Compliance with mandate of federal court.—The action of the supreme court of California upon the presentation of a writ of mandate from the supreme court of United States is limited to the directions found in the writ, and where the mandate contains no reference to the affirmance of the judgment theretofore rendered, it is useless for the court to reaffirm its order of judgment.⁶

Remedy for noncompliance.—Where the circumstances warrant, a compliance with a remittitur may be enforced by mandamus,⁷ certiorari,⁸ writ of prohibition,⁹ or by contempt proceedings.¹⁰ In order to determine whether or not the lower court entered the judgment ordered by the appellate court, the party aggrieved may appeal from a judgment entered pursuant to the directions of the court of review.¹¹ Upon such appeal the only question for review is whether the judgment entered conforms to the direction of the appellate court. Whether the former judgment was warranted by law cannot be considered.¹²

§ 626. Allowing Amendments and Additional Pleadings.—After reversal and remand for new trial, the parties in the court below have the same rights which they originally had.¹³ The trial court has full power to allow amendments to the pleadings,¹⁴ independent of any direction of the appellate court.¹⁵ And the party may apply for leave to amend in the same manner as when a demurrer to his pleading is sustained.¹⁶ It would require, at least, an express decision by the appellate court to the effect that an amendment otherwise proper should not be made in the court below to take from it its ordinary powers to allow such amendments as appear to be in furtherance of justice, and necessary or proper to enable the parties to present their whole case on the merits.¹⁷ A direction by the appellate court to allow certain amendments makes it obligatory upon the trial court to allow them, in the absence of any new facts which might justify a refusal to do so.¹⁸ But such a direction does not preclude the court from allowing other amendments.¹⁹ It may permit further amendments presenting additional facts entitling the parties to relief not warranted by the original pleadings,²⁰ but it may deny an application which changes an admission under oath to a denial.¹

After affirmance of a judgment the trial court cannot vacate the judgment, permit the plaintiff to amend his complaint and proceed with the trial of the case. The litigation is ended,² and the only amendments allowed are for clerical misprisions when the means for making the amendments and the right to make them are furnished by the record itself.³

a judgment in conformity with the order of the appellate court.⁴ That order is decisive of the character of the judgment to which the appellant is entitled, and the superior court has no authority to modify, change or disregard it in any respect,⁵ not even if the judgment directed to be entered fails to give a party what was justly or legally his due.⁶ It cannot reopen the case on the facts, allow the filing of amended or supplemental pleadings,⁷ and retry the case,⁸ and if it should do so, the judgment rendered thereon would be void.⁹ A judgment otherwise in pursuance of the mandate of an appellate court is not, however, vitiated by the addition of a clause that the party is entitled to appropriate process to enforce the judgment so given.¹⁰

ment and enter a new judgment covering the whole ground.¹² But the trial court cannot of course change the original judgment in any particular other than as directed.

Time of entry.—When the mandate directs the entry of judgment on some issues and a new trial of the remainder, without specifying when the judgment shall be entered, the presumption is that it was intended that the judgment should be entered at the same time as and should constitute a part of the final judgment to be rendered on all the issues. This is in accord with the general rule that there can be but one final judgment in an ordinary civil action.¹³

Amendment or vacation of judgment entered.—While a trial court cannot vacate a judgment docketed in conformity with the directions of the appellate court,¹⁴ it has authority to make a judgment entered on its records conform to the directions of the trial court, where the cause is remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion of the appellate court. When the direction is not specific, but leaves room for the exercise of any discretion in the court below, the court has a judicial power to determine whether an order as entered does or does not conform to the direction of the appellate court.¹⁵ This power has been impliedly recognized also where there is a simple reversal.¹⁶

New Trial.

§ 628. Effect of Decision as Granting New Trial.—While an appellate court has authority to limit the trial after remand to one or more issues,²⁰ a remand for new trial in general terms without limitations must ordinarily be understood as a new trial of the whole case,¹ even when such an order is made because of a failure to find upon some material issue.² Of course, when all the parties to a suit are not parties to an appeal, a reversal and order for new trial affects only the parties before the appellate court.³

Where new trial is not specifically directed.—Upon an appeal from a judgment, an order, “Judgment reversed and cause remanded,” has the effect of remanding the cause to the lower court for a new trial of all the issues made by the pleadings,⁴ unless there is something in the opinion of the court restricting the operation of the words "reversed" and "remanded."⁵

The effect of a reversal in general terms is to award a new trial of the case where the ground for reversal is errors in the admission or exclusion of evidence,⁶ or that the findings were not justified by the evidence.⁷ A reversal on the ground that the judgment is not supported by the findings does not necessarily imply that any judgment ought to be rendered on the findings, for it may be that there is no finding at all upon a material fact, in which event no judgment could properly be rendered.⁸ On a reversal for failure to find upon all the issues, the lower court may amend its findings without a new trial if it can do so upon the evidence already taken; otherwise it may proceed to hear evidence upon the point, after due notice to the parties.⁹ But in case of a reversal where the judgment was entered before findings had been signed, it has been held that the trial court cannot, on the strength of the former trial, order findings to be prepared and a judgment entered in conformity therewith. It should try the case anew.¹⁰

On appeal from part of judgment.—When an appeal is taken from an independent part of a judgment, a mandate consisting simply of the words, “The judgment is reversed,” is to be construed to refer only to the part of the judgment appealed from and to reverse that part only without affecting the remainder. This results from the fact that the court is without authority on such an appeal to consider the remainder of the judgment.¹¹

Upon appeal from new trial orders.—The affirmance of an order granting a new trial,¹² or reversal of an order denying a new trial,¹³ has the effect of granting a new trial as effectually as if the court below had in words made an order granting a new trial.

A reversal of an order striking from the files a notice of intention to move for new trial remands the proceedings for a new trial.¹⁴

App. 25, 89 Pac. 849 (where the motion was made upon the ground that the findings are not justified by the evidence).

Even when the order remands the cause for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion, its effect is to place the cause in the same situation as to procedure to be followed as though a new trial had been expressly directed, provided there is no contrary indication in the opinion. Irwin v. Towne, 43 Cal. 23.

§ 629. Entertaining Motion for New Trial After Remand.—A motion for new trial is a proceeding independent of judgment and may be granted even after a judgment has been affirmed on appeal, when based upon errors of law not considered or passed upon by the appellate court in affirming the judgment, or upon the ground of newly discovered evidence.¹⁵ But it cannot be granted when the court in order to grant it contravenes what has been adjudicated by the previous decision.¹⁶ When there is a direct appeal from a judgment and an appeal from an order dismissing a motion for new trial, and the former is affirmed and the latter reversed, the affirmance does not preclude the trial court from setting aside the verdict or findings and the judgment based thereon if it should decide that the motion should be granted.¹⁷

Time.—When an appellate court directs the entry of a judgment against the respondent, the time in which to move for a new trial runs from the notice of entry of the second judgment pursuant to the remittitur of the appellate court, and not from the entry of the original judgment. The original judgment being in his favor, the respondent is not required to move for a new trial until there is a judgment affecting him injuriously.¹⁸

Unrep. 980, 53 Pac. 32, holding a reversal and remanding of a cause for a new trial of a single issue is in effect an affirmance of the findings and conclusions of the lower court in all other respects, and the trial court

§ 630. Scope of and Proceedings on New Trial.—If the judgment of the appellate court orders a new trial, the clerk of the superior court, when the remittitur is issued and filed, will proceed to place the cause on the calendar.¹⁹ When a cause is to be tried anew after an appeal, the parties are in the same position, and the cause is to be retried as if it had never been tried,²⁰ with the exception that the former opinion of the appellate court must be followed, so far as applicable, in the new trial.¹ The parties may make such proper amendments to the pleadings as the court might allow,² and are free to introduce any and all competent evidence.³ Although where the judgment is reversed because of the insufficiency of the evidence to support a particular finding, the court may confine the testimony to the issue erroneously decided, and in other respects pass upon the issues in the light of the testimony already before it, or adopt the facts already found upon such testimony.⁴ The trial court may direct a verdict where the facts proved upon the subsequent trial are not materially different from those reviewed by the appellate court and held insufficient to warrant a recovery.⁵ And on reversal of a judgment of dismissal, the motion for dismissal and any demurrer has no power or discretion to re-open or disturb its findings or judgment in such respects.

interposed are before the court for its consideration in the same manner and to the same extent as they were before the court's former action thereon, or as if they had been presented to the court for the first time. It is within the court's discretion to consider the demurrer before passing upon the motion.⁶ The trial court may vacate writs which have been issued to enforce the original judgment, and applications for such relief should be made in that court rather than in the appellate court.⁷ If the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction before the former trial and an injunction was ordered, he is entitled to retain that right when the cause is remanded for new trial.⁸

Stay.—Where a retrial of an action after reversal without the payment of costs upon appeal would be oppressive and vexatious, the superior court has discretionary power to stay the retrial until payment of such costs. But mere nonpayment of costs, not coupled with any other circumstances, is not cause for a stay, and the discretion of the court should be exercised cautiously, ex aequo et bono, employing or declining the power as the right and justice of the particular case may seem to require.⁹

Restitution.

§ 631. In General.—A trial court has power to make restitution of property and rights lost by an erroneous judgment or order, notwithstanding the fact that similar power has been conferred upon the appellate courts.¹⁰ This is in accord with the rule that the granting of power to one court to do an act is not in exclusion of the right of another court possessing the power from acting in respect to the particular matter.¹¹

The rule formerly prevailed that whenever a sale was made under an erroneous decree or judgment, which was afterwards reversed—the court rendering the judgment having jurisdiction of the person and subject matter—the purchaser acquired good title notwithstanding the reversal. It was enough, it was said, for the purchaser to know that the court had jurisdiction and exercised it, and that the judgment on the faith of which he purchased was made and authorized the sale. The former owner was then turned over to an action of damages to make good the loss of his property.¹² That doctrine is now so far modified that, if the plaintiff in the judgment be himself the purchaser, the former owner, after reversal, may at his election either have the sale set aside and be restored to possession, or have his action for damages.¹³ The reason for allowing him the right to have the sale set aside is that his claim to the property depends upon the judgment and is destroyed by its reversal.¹⁴

To be within the protection of the rule and to retain the property purchased, the purchaser must claim to be a bona fide purchaser. To constitute this character, he must show that he has paid the purchase money, and that he is the purchaser of the legal title, not of a mere equity. If he has not received a sheriff's deed, a purchaser at Hosmer*, 45 Cal. 616. The reason for the rule as applied to strangers, as the old authorities say, is that to hold otherwise would cause them to lose both the property they bought and the price. Another reason is, that a contrary rule would discourage bidding at judicial sales. Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 667, 681.

an execution sale has only a lien or equity and is not within the protection of the rule.¹⁵ An assignee of the judgment stands in the same position as the plaintiff, and is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser.¹⁶ So, also, in case the plaintiff purchases the property and then conveys it to another pending appeal, the plaintiff's grantee is presumed to have knowledge of the character of the plaintiff's title, and cannot claim protection from making the restitution which the plaintiff would have been required to make.¹⁷

Where judgment is not reversed.—The reason of the rule does not apply where a judgment directing a sale of property to satisfy a lien is modified by merely reducing the amount of the lien, without changing that portion directing a sale of the property. In that event it cannot be said that the defendant has lost any property unless more of his property has been taken than the amount for which the judgment has been affirmed.¹⁸

§ 632. Proceedings to Obtain Restitution.—Restitution in the lower court may be had by motion in the proceeding, under its well-recognized authority to prevent or remedy an injurious and illegal execution of its process by its officers.¹⁹ It has been suggested that the motion is unaffected by the statute of limitations.²⁰ The code provides that a successful appellant entitled to restitution may have relief by action against the respondent for the proceeds of the sale after deducting the expenses thereof.¹ But the right to such relief existed before the statute.² The successful party upon an appeal may have the proceedings or sale vacated by an independent action in any court of competent jurisdiction.³ If the respondent still has possession of the property in specie, the appellant may bring an action to have the sale under the judgment set aside and to be restored to possession.⁴ If the character of the property is such as to make its seizure under a writ of replevin impossible, he may, by an equitable suit, compel delivery, or, if that cannot be had, compensation in money.⁵ In a proper case, he may also have an action for damages as an alternative.⁶ The remedy of a defendant in a judgment by action for damages is cumulative to that by motion. The fact that he made an abortive attempt by motion to have the sale set aside does not preclude from subsequently suing for damages.⁷

Parties and right to sue.—Tenants in common of property sold under a judgment which has been reversed may join in an action for damages, and if one be dead, his executor or administrator may be joined with the other tenants. If it was the assignee of the judgment who procured the issuance of the execution and sale of the property, the action is properly brought against him.⁸ The mere passive presence of a defendant in execution at an

Complaint.—It is not necessary in a complaint for damages to make a direct averment of the existence of the property, if that fact appears by necessary inference from the facts alleged.¹⁰ Although there is no attempt in a pleading to comply with section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to the manner of alleging the rendition of judgments, it is not necessary to show that the court reversing the judgment had jurisdiction to do so.¹¹

Character and extent of liability.—On reversal of a judgment the extent of liability of a plaintiff in a judgment who obtained property of a defendant thereunder is that applicable to a trustee, the rule in such case being that he shall conduct the business of the trust in the same manner as an ordinarily prudent man of business would conduct his own. He is not chargeable with more than he received, nor liable for losses if he acted in good faith and with common skill, prudence and diligence.¹² But if he converts the property to his own use, he is liable for its value at the time of the conversion with interest.¹³

VIII. JURISDICTION OF AND PROCEEDINGS IN APPELLATE COURT AFTER REMAND.

§ 633. Where Remittitur is Duly Issued.—While an appellate court has power to make any proper order in a case until its remittitur is duly issued,¹⁴ its jurisdiction over the appeal ends when its mandate issues in regular course, or when it is regularly issued and filed in the court below. Thereafter, it cannot recall the case and reverse or modify its decision.¹⁵ It cannot thereafter recall its remittitur,¹⁶ or modify its judgment. The decision has become a finality beyond the power of the court to modify,¹⁷ except as to the correction of clerical errors in the judgment readily corrected by the record.¹⁸ It cannot be modified even upon a subsequent appeal from orders made pursuant to the remittitur of such appellate court, as the duty of the trial court in such case is merely to make such orders as may be necessary to cause its judgment to be enforced.¹⁹

§ 634. Where Remittitur is Irregularly Issued.—The foregoing rules are based upon the assumption that the remittitur was regularly issued. If the remittitur has been issued inadvertently, or if some fraud has been practiced upon the appellate court and the opposite party, the court is not divested of jurisdiction,²⁰ and it may recall its remittitur, and take such steps as may be necessary or proper in the circumstances.¹ This is not done upon the principle of resumption of jurisdiction, but upon the ground that the jurisdiction of the court cannot be divested by an irregular or improvident order. In contemplation of law, an order obtained upon a false suggestion is not the order of the court, and may be treated as a nullity. If, under color of such an order, the proceedings have in part found their way back to the court below, yet in law they are considered as still pending in the appellate court, and that court may take such steps as may be necessary to make the fact and law agree.²

Not only may an appellate court recall its remittitur in order that it may revoke or revise its judgment or order in a case where fraud or imposition has been practiced upon the court,³ but it may also recall its remittitur for the purpose of correcting clerical errors or omissions in it and to make it conform to the final judgment of the court.⁴ For example, it will recall its remittitur if the clerk omits to insert therein a direction as to costs as required by rule XXIII of the supreme court,⁵ or if he inserts such direction in a case not embraced by the rule,⁶ or where by mistake the clerk enters an order denying, when in fact the order made granted, a rehearing.⁷ A remittitur will be recalled which has issued prematurely,⁸ or which was issued after the filing of a petition for rehearing,⁹ or after the entry of an order granting a rehearing.¹⁰ A petition for rehearing placed in the office of an express company addressed to the clerk in time to have reached him within the time allowed by law for filing is in contemplation of law in the hands of the clerk within the time limited by law. And though the petition be lost and fail to reach the clerk, the issuance of a remittitur is improper and will be recalled.¹¹ Also, it would be the plain duty of the appellate court to recall its remittitur if its judgment were void.¹² But it has been held that the pendency of an oral motion to vacate the judgment, or the failure of the record to show the denial of the motion, does not affect the regularity of the remittitur and it will not be recalled.¹³ And a motion to recall a remittitur is not a proper remedy for a litigant who is dissatisfied with the judgment of the appellate court,¹⁴ or to reach errors of the lower court committed after the remittitur has gone down.¹⁵

Proceedings.—The grounds upon which a recall of a remittitur is desired should be stated in the notice of motion, but in the absence of a statute or rule of court, a notice will not be held insufficient for failing to state specifically the precise ground upon which it will be made, if the terms of the notice otherwise disclose the ground, and the opposite party is not prejudiced.¹⁶ The moving party should not be guilty of laches,¹⁷ as this of itself is a good ground for denying his application.¹⁸ tract. They can be held to no different contract from that into which they have entered.¹⁹ For example, the sureties against waste on a particular piece of property cannot be held liable for waste on another parcel of property.²⁰ So, also, where an appeal is taken by one party, and the undertaking thereon purports to be given on an appeal by several appellants, it has been held that the sureties standing on the strict letter of their contract could never be liable for anything; since, as it is said, "there never was a joint appeal, there never could be an award of damages, or costs against the appellants."¹

The obligation to pay the judgment resting on the sureties on an undertaking to stay execution on a money judgment is absolute and subsists until the judgment is actually paid. Any performance by the defendant that will discharge the judgment against him will operate as a discharge of the sureties, and any act of the plaintiff that will release the defendant from the judgment will also release them, but so long as the plaintiff has the right to enforce the judgment against the defendant, he is entitled to enforce their obligation. On the other hand, when the judgment has been revived against the defendant, under section 708 of the Code of Civil Procedure, after having been satisfied by the purchase of property under execution which belonged to a third party, and was recovered by such third party, the sureties are liable to pay the amount of such revived judgment, and a new judgment may be entered against them for such amount.²

Conclusiveness of recitals in undertaking.—With some exceptions, the sureties are bound by the statements in their contract and cannot question the truth of its recitals.³ By this rule the sureties in an action on an undertaking to stay execution of a judgment in ejectment are estopped from denying that the appellant was in possession of the premises at the time he gave the undertaking.⁴

§ 636. Performance or Breach of Condition.—Inasmuch as appeal bonds are conditioned to pay the judgment appealed from if affirmed, there is no liability thereon when the judgment appealed from is reversed with directions to enter a different judgment.⁵ While the code now requires the undertakings on appeal in a generality of cases to provide for payment by the sureties both when the judgment is affirmed and when the appeal is dismissed, the Practice Act did not require a stipulation as to liability in the event the appeal was dismissed. Under this state of the law it was held that the affirmance which fixed the liability of the sureties contemplated any action of the appellate court by virtue of which the judgment or order was no longer open for review, whether that be by a dismissal of the appeal or by a direct decree of affirmance.⁶ Therefore, it was held that there was such an affirmance as would charge the sureties, where the Astorg*, 29 Cal. App. 740, 156 Pac. 873 (holding this rule has no application where an appeal is taken by one person and the undertaking purports to be given on an appeal taken by several persons, as the surety in resisting an action is merely denying that the bond was given to secure the appeal of one. He is standing on the terms of his contract); Hammond v. United States F. & G. Co., 29 Cal. App. 464, 155 Pac. 1023.

Affirmance in part.—Inasmuch as an undertaking given under section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure is required to be to the effect that the appellant will pay the amount directed to be paid “if the judgment or order appealed from or any part thereof be affirmed,” it follows that the sureties are liable on their undertaking where the judgment is affirmed in part; as, for example, where a judgment against several persons jointly is reversed as to certain of the appellants and affirmed as to the remainder.⁹ Section 945 does not, however, provide in terms for an affirmance in part. This omission is significant, and manifests the intention of the legislature that the sureties are not to be bound in case of a partial performance, but only in case the judgment is affirmed as rendered and entered in the court below.¹⁰

In replevin.—A failure, within a reasonable time after affirmance of a judgment in replevin and remittitur sent down, to deliver the property in suit, constitutes a breach of the stay undertaking, and the respondent’s right of action is complete. He is not required to sue for a delivery of the property, and his right of action is not affected by a tender of the property made during trial.¹¹

§ 637. Defenses in General.—The sureties cannot question the jurisdiction of the trial court to entertain the action, because the affirmance by the appellate court is conclusive upon the appellant as to the jurisdiction of the trial court as well as to other matters involved in the case, and is therefore conclusive upon the sureties also.¹² Hence, the rule that sureties cannot question the validity of a judgment of affirmance on the ground of jurisdiction or any other ground.¹³ Where one of the plaintiffs in a suit dies before judgment, a judgment rendered nominally for or against him as representing his heirs or other successors being voidable only, not void, a stay bond following the judgment executed nominally to the deceased party with others but really to his executors is valid and enforceable.¹⁴ The sureties on an undertaking to stay execution of a judgment in ejectment are not released from liability because the plaintiff pending the appeal sells a portion of the premises. The principle entitling a surety upon payment to an assignment of the securities of the principal obligor in the hands of the obligee is not applicable, as the land belongs to the plaintiff and is not held by him as security for the use and occupation.¹⁵ Inasmuch as a tender, although refused, is equivalent to payment, it has been held that the sureties upon an undertaking on appeal are released from liability by tendering the amount for which they are bound.¹⁶

§ 638. Defects and Omissions in and Alteration of Undertaking.—When the party in whose favor an undertaking to stay execution is executed has had the benefit of the stay, the sureties cannot be heard to say that the undertaking is void because all the forms of the statute, through their omission, were not complied with.¹⁷ For example, since the provisions as to the amount of a stay undertaking are merely directory, and while the adverse party may insist upon an undertaking in the amount prescribed by the statute, he may waive any insufficiency therein. If he considers the appeal as regularly taken and takes no steps to enforce the judgment, the sureties are liable, though the amount specified therein is less than that prescribed by the statute.¹⁸ So, also, the affidavit of justification of the sureties being for the benefit of the adverse party, defects or omissions therein may be waived by him, either expressly or impliedly, by failing to take advantage of the omission, and treating and accepting the undertaking as sufficient. When so waived, the undertaking is sufficient in an action upon it against the sureties.¹⁹

Alteration.—An alteration of the undertaking after its execution will discharge the sureties from all obligation thereon. And so it has been held that when an undertaking is executed before the rendition of judgment, an interlineation of the date of the judgment subsequent to its execution is such an alteration of the contract entered into by the sureties as to discharge them from liability.²⁰

§ 639. Want of Consideration.—In an undertaking on appeal the sureties agree to be liable if the appeal is dismissed, and inasmuch as the respondent must be at some expense to have even a void appeal dismissed, it cannot be said that an undertaking on appeal is without consideration because the appeal it was given to secure was ineffectual.¹ This reasoning can have no application, however, to an undertaking required merely to secure a stay of proceedings during an appeal which has already been taken. If in the latter case the appeal should be ineffectual, the undertaking is without consideration, and no recovery can be had thereon against the sureties.² There can be no estoppel which precludes the sureties from raising the defense of want of consideration, whatever the terms of the instrument may be.³

Unnecessary bond.—It is only upon a statutory bond given pursuant to section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure that judgment can be ordered against the sureties on motion.⁴ If the judgment from which an appeal is taken is not such as calls for the giving of a bond to stay execution, aside from the ordinary three hundred dollar appeal bond, a bond filed for that purpose is without consideration, and judgment against the sureties cannot be ordered thereon on motion.⁵ So, also, if a stay bond under section 942 is given in a case in which a bond under section 943 or 945 is required, the bond is without consideration and is unenforceable on motion.⁶ The mere fact that the respondent because of such bond forbears the execution of his judgment does not make it valid as a statutory bond and authorize judgment against the sureties on motion. Such act can at most only constitute a consideration and make the undertaking valid as a common-law obligation.⁷ A mere forbearance, however, to sell the property involved as perishable will not constitute a consideration and render the undertaking valid as a common-law obligation, as no stay bond would have the effect of staying a sale of perishable property. In other words, in such case the privilege sought is not in fact secured by the undertaking.⁸

II. ENFORCEMENT BY ACTION.

§ 640. In General.—Upon the breach of a condition of an undertaking on appeal or to stay execution, the respondent may enforce the liability of the sureties by an ordinary civil action, or, in the case of an undertaking given pursuant to section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he may have judgment entered against the sureties upon motion.⁹ The undertaking to stay execution and the undertaking upon appeal are distinct, and though both are included in one instrument, the fact that the respondent brings an action on the former does not preclude him later from suing upon the latter.¹⁰ The undertaking is an express contract for the direct payment of money in the sense of the statute of limitations, and an attachment may be issued in such action where the grounds exist therefor.¹¹

§ 641. Time to Sue.—The right of action upon an undertaking on appeal or to stay execution accrues upon the affirmance or dismissal of the judgment to which the action relates, and must be brought within the statutory period thereafter, or it will be barred by the statute of limitations. This rule applies as well to a cause of action upon an undertaking, given under section 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to pay the value of the use and occupation of property from the time of the appeal until delivery of possession. Such cause of action accrues upon the affirmance of the judgment, though the liability may continue until the appellant delivers possession of the premises.¹² Moreover, it is an action upon contract and is not one of trespass for mesne profits. It is not therefore within the rule that applies to actions not maintainable before possession is regained.¹³ An action on an undertaking to perfect an appeal or stay execution should not be brought prematurely, however.¹⁴ And an action thereon cannot be brought, so long as there is in force a supersedeas or an order staying execution on the judgment. To hold otherwise would be to regard the sureties less favorably than their principal.¹⁵

Prior to the amendment of sections 337 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1917, the code distinguished between actions upon contracts "executed within the state" and upon those "executed out of the state" in respect to the time within which the action must be brought. Under this state of the law, it was held that an undertaking was "executed" when filed with the clerk, and that therefore the place of filing determined whether the instrument was executed in or out of the state within the meaning of the statute.¹⁶

Under the rule that a stay on appeal from an order denying a new trial stays execution on the judgment, the sureties on a stay bond executed on an appeal from the judgment cannot be liable on their bond after the dismissal of the appeal, while a separate appeal from an order on new trial is pending which operates as a stay of execution on the judgment. Starr v. Kreuzberger, 131 Cal. 41.

§ 642. Conditions Precedent.—An undertaking to stay execution of a judgment or order is an independent and absolute undertaking that if the judgment be affirmed or the appeal be dismissed the appellant will pay the judgment or do such other act as is therein stated. By its terms it precludes the idea that the judgment creditor must first exhaust his remedy under the judgment by execution before he can resort to his action on the undertaking. Neither the issuance of an execution and return unsatisfied¹⁷ nor a demand on the principal for payment¹⁸ is a condition precedent to an action upon a stay bond. If one of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal dies before suit, the respondent does not forfeit his right of action against the other sureties by failing to present his claim against the estate of the deceased surety.¹⁹

§ 643. Parties.—An action on an undertaking to stay execution of a judgment may be brought in the name of the judgment creditor in his own name. Though it is not expressly made payable to him, it should be treated as if so made payable. Where the action is continued and the judgment is rendered in his name, the action may be brought in his name, even though, pending the action, he had transferred his interest therein. In such case he sues as a trustee of an express trust for the benefit of his transferee.²⁰ An action upon an undertaking given on an appeal from an order appointing a receiver is properly brought by the plaintiff in the original action rather than by the receiver, as the undertaking runs to him.¹

After assignment.—While an assignee of the judgment and of the undertaking may sue in his own name, it is not clear whether an assignee of the undertaking can recover without also alleging and proving an assignment of the judgment.² It has been held that the undertaking does not pass by the assignment of the judgment, because it is not a necessary incident to the judgment, and that the assignee cannot maintain an action upon the undertaking in his own name;³ but, as pointed out in a later decision, the court in so holding evidently overlooked the real party in interest rule. Under the code provision requiring actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, an assignment of the judgment without an assignment of the undertaking on appeal, operates as an equitable assignment of the undertaking so as to entitle the assignee to sue thereon in his own name.⁴ It is probable that the action may be brought by either party, the assignee suing as the real party in interest, the assignor as trustee of an express trust.

taking on appeal is executed to both of them, they may join in an action upon the undertaking.⁵

§ 644. Pleadings.—A complaint on an undertaking on appeal or to stay execution should conform to the general rules governing complaints in actions upon contract generally. It must plead the undertaking,⁶ and allege its execution and filing,⁷ the taking of the appeal, the disposition of the appeal, and breach of the undertaking. An allegation that the party “appealed to the superior court of said county and state from said judgment” is a sufficient averment of that fact. The “appeal” is the ultimate fact to be alleged. The several acts performed in taking it are but probative facts, and their allegation in the complaint would be obnoxious to the charge of alleging evidence instead of facts. An appeal is not in any sense a “judgment or other determination” within the meaning of section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hence, it is unnecessary to state that the appeal was “duly” taken.⁸ And it has been held that an averment that the appeal was dismissed by the appellate court, even though defective, is cured by an allegation in the answer that the court made an order of dismissal, “which said judgment was duly made, duly rendered, and duly given.”⁹

A complaint on an undertaking to stay execution of a money judgment need not allege that execution was issued upon the judgment against the appellant, as the non-payment of the judgment can be shown without the issuance of an execution.¹⁰ Where a claim is made for costs on appeal, it seems that as costs are not formally awarded as a rule but follow the judgment as a matter of course, it is unnecessary to make a specific allegation that costs were awarded. Such allegation would follow as a legal presumption from the allegation that the judgment was affirmed.¹¹ A complaint on a stay bond is not bad on demurrer because it omits to state that the undertaking was accompanied by an affidavit of sureties that they are worth double the sum specified therein.¹² And a complaint on a bond to stay execution of a judgment for sale or delivery of real property need not allege that the plaintiff in the judgment is entitled to the rents and profits, as this is determined by the judgment appealed from.¹³

The defendant must demur or answer in accordance with the general rules governing such pleadings.¹⁴

§ 645. Trial and Judgment.—The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence are applicable to an action upon an undertaking to perfect an appeal or stay execution.¹⁵

Amount of liability.—The undertaking of a surety to stay execution of a judgment of foreclosure is to the effect that “if the judgment be affirmed, he [the appellant] will pay the value of the use and occupation of the property from the time of appeal until delivery of possession thereof." Where the judgment gives no right to the possession or rents and profits, the debtor may remain in possession without being accountable for rents or use and occupation, until a sale has been made, and the legislature cannot have intended to increase his liability in the case of an appeal, or to require an undertaking subjecting the sureties to a greater liability than that of the principal. Thus considered, the stipulation to pay the value of the use must refer to those cases in which the creditor is entitled to the value of the use. When he is not entitled thereto, the stipulation to pay it is not binding on the sureties.¹⁶ Under an undertaking in a lump sum providing against waste and deficiency, no recovery can be had against the sureties for the deficiency if the penal sum fixed is consumed by a judgment against them for waste, but if no damage for waste is recovered, the full amount of the penal sum is available to make good any deficiency. If the deficiency exceeds that amount, the fact that the plaintiff asks judgment for the whole amount does not deprive him of his right to recover the sum named in the undertaking.¹⁷

Reimbursement of sureties.—"Whenever any surety on any undertaking on appeal, executed to stay proceedings upon a money judgment, pays the judgment, either with or without action, after its affirmance by the appellate court, he is substituted to the rights of the judgment creditor, and is entitled to control, enforce and satisfy such judgment, in all respects as if he had recovered the same."¹⁸ Provision is also made for sureties upon appeal bonds.¹⁹

III. ENFORCEMENT BY MOTION FOR JUDGMENT.

§ 646. In General.—The code requires that the undertaking to stay proceedings on a judgment or order directing the payment of money contain a stipulation that if the appellant does not make payment within thirty days after the filing of the remittitur from the supreme court in the court from which the appeal is taken, judgment may be entered on motion of the respondent in his favor against the sureties for such amount, together with the interest that may be due thereon, and the damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal.²⁰ Recovery on any bond other than one covered by section 942 must be by action.

Nature of proceeding.—The entry of judgment against the surety upon a stay bond is not a special proceeding, but is in sequence of the judgment rendered therein against the appellant, in which action against the appellant the surety made itself a party to the original action and proceedings.¹

§ 647. Constitutional Questions.—A statute allowing judgment on motion against the sureties who have subscribed an undertaking as required by the code is not unconstitutional.² It does not deprive a party of process without due process of law. By signing the undertaking, the sureties, in legal effect, make themselves parties to the action, and submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court. Having voluntarily made themselves parties to the action and submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, they also assent to and adopt all the provisions of law for the enforcement of the obligation incurred by their undertaking. They thereby waive any constitutional or statutory right in its enforcement to which they may otherwise be entitled, such as original process to make them parties to the action.³

§ 648. When Liability Accrues.—By the terms of their undertaking the sureties do not become liable to the respondent until the expiration of thirty days after the remittitur upon the affirmance of the judgment had been filed in the superior court. Any judgment entered prior to that time is premature and will be reversed on appeal.⁴ And when a party appeals from a judgment and an order on motion for new trial, and his undertaking refers only to the judgment appealed from, the liability of the sureties upon the stay undertaking does not become fixed until the disposition of the appeal from the judgment. A disposition of the appeal from the order is not sufficient. If on an appeal from a judgment and an order on motion for new trial the clerk from inadvertence omits to send down a remittitur as to the appeal to which the undertaking relates, the sureties are not liable, as the omission of the clerk cannot take away their right to stand upon their contract.⁵

§ 649. Proceedings.—A proceeding to enforce an undertaking by motion is a statutory proceeding, and the course on appeal from an order denying a new trial refers to the remittitur on appeal from the judgment, the sureties are not liable until thirty days from the filing of a remittitur on the appeal from the judgment have elapsed).

5. McCallion v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society, 83 Cal. 571, 23 Pac. 798.

pointed out by statute must be strictly pursued.⁶ The code authorizes the continuance of an action in the name of the original party after the transfer of his interest in the subject of action. Where the judgment, after affirmance and before remittitur, is assigned by the respondent to a third party without mentioning the appeal bond, the respondent may have judgment on the bond in his own name, and it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that he is acting in behalf of the real party in interest.⁷

By signing the undertaking to stay execution pursuant to section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the sureties consent that judgment should be rendered against them for the amount as to which the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.⁸ And they waive notice thereof, so that no notice to them of the making of the motion for judgment is necessary.⁹ This mode of procedure does not prejudice any rights of the parties, for if the judgment were in fact paid, though not satisfied of record, the sureties may have satisfaction entered and have the judgment vacated or annulled, and any execution that may have been issued recalled.¹⁰ The records and files

consideration whether, in view of the importance of an opportunity to be heard, it ought not to be presumed that the parties contracted with reference to notice, and that it formed a part of their contract.

The contract of the surety is not that he "will pay" or "will be liable" if his principal fails, but that judgment may be entered against him, on motion, for the amount which has already been adjudicated to be due from his principal. This is an express waiver of further notice. Mowry v. Henry, 3 Cal. Unrep. 277, 24 Pac. 301. For opinion in bank, see 86 Cal. 475, 25 Pac. 17.

in the case are before the court for the purposes of the motion. Formal introduction thereof in evidence is unnecessary.¹¹ The court has to decide only the question of law, whether or not, upon the facts appearing in these documents, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the surety.¹²

§ 650. Judgment.—The terms of the undertaking authorize the entry of judgment “against the undersigned sureties.” Under such undertaking it is not permissible to render judgment against one of the sureties only, no reason appearing why the other is not joined, except that he cannot be bound and served with notice.¹³

“When the judgment or order appealed from is made payable in a specified kind of money or currency, the judgment entered against the sureties upon the undertaking must be made payable in the same kind of money or currency.”¹⁴

The decision of a motion for a judgment against a surety on an undertaking on appeal, cannot be re-examined by motion for a new trial.¹⁵ But when the judgment against the sureties is satisfied, they are entitled to the same notice as the judgment debtor himself of proceedings to set aside the satisfaction or revive the judgment under section 708 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They are entitled to contest the facts upon which the petitioner relies to revive the judgment.¹⁶
